Speaker for April 15th, 2018

Barry Eaton

- The Secrets of Life After Death -

Renowned book author, psychic intuitive and broadcaster Barry Eaton has written a number of books on life after death.

He will join us to answer all the questions people have on life after death. Filled with amazing stories and firsthand accounts, including Barry's own remarkable experiences.

So what does happen when someone dies? What does it feel like? Why do some people find it hard to leave places and loved ones behind? And how do people who die in accidents and other sudden deaths fare? How does our grief affect those who have passed on?

Based on his own amazing experiences of life between lives and his numerous communications with those who have passed over, Barry Eaton answers many questions about the spirit world. Well-known both as a mainstream journalist and broadcaster, and for his internet radio show RadioOutThere.com, Barry Eaton gives regular talks and lectures, as well as one-on-one sessions as a psychic intuitive.

He has written two books: 'No Goodbyes' and 'Afterlife: Uncovering the Secrets of Life After Death', and is currently writing a third one about past lives and reincarnation.

Following our March AGM all the officers, committee members and our president remain. The only change is Ronald Yabsley who joins the committee and takes Elene Dimopoulos's place.

For those who missed last month Brown's Gas presentation, you can view it now on our website at www.dowsingaustralia.com/bg.pdf.

Today is the first of April so here is a joke: What happens when you take the shell of a snail off? Answer: The snail becomes very sluggish!

So this strikes me as being the very opposite of what happens to us humans when our shell of self-image, of internal dialogue is turned off. Instead we become alive, energised, intuitive, connected. We become who we really are. Turning off the inner dialogue is no mean feat, this is why every year I spend time walking the Camino in Spain or Portugal.

The ancient Greeks believed in a multi-headed serpentine water monster called the Hydra. When Heracles, who was sent to slay it, tried to cut one head, two grew up in its place. To win, he had to use a magical golden sword given to him by Athena.

That really describes well what happens in my head when I try to turn that inner dialogue off. Walking is one of the magical swords I use to shut that multi-headed hydra up, at least temporarily. Of course meditating is the other one.

Turning off the inner dialogue is helpful with anything to do with intuition, inner work and of course dowsing. This is the key to improving your life from the inside out.

Actually if you want to learn more about dowsing, in this case particularly as it relates to homeopathic remedies, we have a new seminar on the 6th of May with Jill Turland. You will find details and a registration form at the end of this newsletter. Jill presented to us recently. She is very knowledgeable and a very good teacher, I recommend it.

Until next time

We Are All One

By John Living

American Society of Dowsers, Winter 2005

(Excerpted from Living's book, 'Intuition Technology')

We are all One. If we accept that everything has intelligence, and perhaps the ability to feel and love, then we can accept that ancient saying, 'We're all One.' Yes, we each have our individuality, but we also are a part of the overall family team of creation, able to access the family mind, the universal intelligence, the morphogenic fields [of Shel-drake and others].

Many accomplished dowsers believe that when we dowse we contact that universal intelligence - the 'Force for Good', the God level, or whatever name we personally choose to use. We know of many cases where people who are sick have been cured by prayer and by healing energies sent by others, even at great distances.

It is my understanding that in what we call an electron there are about 1,000,000,000,000 tiny string-like 'baby energies' that can all think, feel, and love. These baby energies 'follow the leader' to do dances in spiralling waves, forming matter, carrying thoughts, and being the light that gives life. So if all that is us is made of these baby energies (as is all else in the physical world), we can better understand that we are all one. Perhaps all other existence (including 'above' and 'below') are made of these same baby energies travelling at various speeds and in different dimensions according to the energy (in our worldly sense) that they have available.

Thus we can consider our physical bodies as being made of these baby energies operating at one speed, perhaps guided and/or controlled by other similar baby energies working at higher speeds (or different dimensions) as our mind, our Higher Self, our Soul, and as thought forms in our auras. Light is probably the driving force or the energy (in our worldly sense)-the energy of love being the purest form of light!

Accepting that we are all energy bodies enables us to appreciate that ‘working with the energies’ is essential to our wellbeing.

We must get all our own energies working together in harmony and love, and take all possible steps to ensure that negative energies (those not in our highest and best good) are not able to interfere with us or dominate our thoughts and actions.

Perhaps when we think of a person or a thing, our mind-brain team tunes to the correct communication band or frequency and broadcasts a message which is received and a reply sent. Our mind-brain team, because it can identify who is being thought about, is able to send a message to the individual involved, being addressed like the call sign used by radio enthusiasts or the identity codes of an internet transmission.

But how can we, who have no clue about a particular disease, still help the affected person? We send a message carrying the needed patterns of vibrations, probably obtained by asking for help from the ‘Force for Good’. Such vibrational patterns are often carried in plants (whose essences act as medicine) and in crystals.

Intentionality Creates Vibrational Environments

Where do the thoughts and vibrations that we send go? There is growing evidence that we all have auras and that the causal influences of many of our problems are located there, perhaps as thought forms which we have constructed over the years as a belief system.

Simple dowsing experiments show that we can affect the size of another person's aura just by sending them love!

All this amounts to thoughts being able to interface in various ways with the recipient. Perhaps they change the dances made by the sub-strings, thus modifying the energy systems within a being; they may be creating a vibrational environment that is not liked by diseases or by unwelcome emotions.

A Cure for Cancer?

In 'Occult Chemistry', written by C. W. Leadbeater with Annie Besant, they reported on their examinations of all known (and some unknown) atoms plus some compounds, starting in 1895 and ending in 1933 when both died.

They were able to see (psychically) sub-atomic particles (and were laughed at, since everyone knew the atom could not have smaller pieces) and how these sub-atomic particles fitted together and reacted to others and to electrical forces.

They showed how the atoms were formed by conjoining basic configurations, in a way still unrecognised by science, and how the periodic table was formed in the manner of a swinging pendulum.

At the end of the book is a record of the discussions made during Leadbeater's observations, and included in this are some remarks about diseases. On examining the cancer cell, Mr. Leadbeater observed that it is exactly like a normal cell except that it is an enantiomorph, a looking-glass image of it. It is as if a right-handed glove were to be drawn inside out to make a left-handed glove.

Leadbeater did not know what caused the inversion, and no virus was sought. He wrote “When a cell starts this inversion, which is easily observed from the fourth dimensional view, it acts explosively and seems to affect other cells and make them invert also.”

I came across another statement, made by either Leadbeater or Barbara Ann Brennan, but did not note the place at the time and so cannot quote the source. However it is clear in my mind: “In each and every case of cancer that I saw, the cancer cells spiralled anti-clockwise, and the normal cells rotated clockwise.”

Considering both these statements, and imagining arrows of different colours imprinted normally on the surface of a healthy cell pointing in the spiralling direction, it seems that on a cancer cell not only would the imaginary arrows be pointing backwards, but also that the order of imaginary colours would be maintained on the cell.

In other words, in each cell (healthy or cancer), the imaginary red arrow follows the imaginary green arrow which follows the imaginary blue arrow in spiralling.

This inversion/reversal is, in my opinion, the result to be expected from the effects of an energy vortex, such as from earth energies in the Curry grids and due to noxious water veins, their crossings, and probably electromagnetic forces.

How can we use our power of thought to overcome this disease? One way is to direct that each cell, including all in it, in the body that has changed by inversion now re-invert to its original state.

Another may be to direct the body's supplier of life energy to cease giving life energy to any cell that is inverted or is spiraling anti-clockwise. Perhaps we should order the re-inversion first, and then cut off life support to all that failed to re-invert and are still spiralling anti-clockwise.

My friend, Raymon Grace, recently read the material about cancer cells in Part 2 of this article and wrote me with the following feedback.

“Thank you for this, because it confirms what I found. Healthy cells have a clockwise spin, and unhealthy cells have a counter-clockwise spin. It seems there are some people whose cells do not spin at all. I assume that they are in transition from right to left, but I don’t know how long this process takes.”

The Usefulness of Dowsing

Dowsing is but one of many ways of accessing this power. But its usefulness is the ease with which a beginner can start to do so and get feedback. In prayer, we speak; when dowsing, we also hear the reply!

Where do we go from here? There are many books that can help people to dowse, and many web pages on the internet. Societies publish journals, hold meetings, and have conventions. By attending conventions you will meet many other dowsers, discuss problems, and receive help and advice from experienced teachers.

Tracing the Lost

By J. Cecil Maby

Reprinted from the British Society of Dowsers, Dec 1950

I recall a test at Kirtlington Park, near Oxford, some years ago, at a BSD meeting organised by Mr. H. M. Budgett. What then happened in my own case, when I was virtually successful in locating a living boy who had hidden inside a hollow oak tree in the great park (whereabouts unknown to anyone present), may throw some further light on this problem.

At a central point in the extensive grounds, competitors were asked to take from a tin small fragments of a torn-up shirt that the boy had been wearing recently, for use as 'samples.'

I took my piece, pressed it to my forehead, concentrated for a moment on the idea of finding him, then started off in the direction in which I was 'impressed' to go, using an ordinary swivelling angle rod, which I tried to use as a mobile pointer. But I had not got far into a shrubbery when I began to get reactions to underground streams, etc. So I turned back and started over again.

The second time I simply concentrated 'mentally', keeping my mind as blank and receptive as possible while turning slowly around, and was again 'impressed' to follow my original route. This I did without using any mechanical indicator, only a vague instinct. I was led straight through the extensive shrubbery to the edge of the park itself.

There I paused, but was 'led' straight on to a group of large trees - not the only group, as far as I recollect. When I reached these trees I felt that I had come to the end of the trail, and I then looked up into them and behind them, searching for the lad in the ordinary way, instead of trying more divining or 'sensing'. But our 'target' was not to be seen, so I returned once again to the starting point.

Repeating the performance once more, I was 'led' to the same spot at the edge of the park, in line with the large trees, and still felt impelled in that direction. However, casting around (mentally) afresh I sensed that perhaps I should have gone from there to a point in a coppice on my left.

So I followed this new line and penetrated some way into the wood, arriving suddenly and unexpectedly at a large shed containing pumping machinery. I then repeated my former mistake of searching the shed and environs with my eyes, without reward. I then gave up the search.

Subsequently, having reported roughly as above (I speak from memory, having lost the original account), I was told that the boy had actually been hidden in one of the large trees to which I had first felt drawn.

I also found that he and his assistant had gone to the shed in the wood for a ladder (later replaced) by which to gain access to the hollowed interior of the tree. It can fairly be claimed, I believe, that I was successful, apart from actually seeing the boy inside the hollow tree!

In this case at least, therefore, a generalised, unspecified form of subconscious ESP seems to have been used, without the neuro-muscular reflexes; though I still believe that radiesthesia, not any purely psychic faculty, was the means by which directional sense, syntonised with the 'target', was achieved.

In such locational tests, whether with or without a rod as indicator, living objectives are by no means essential; nor, in some instances, such as location of unexploded bombs, is there any evidence of telepathy.

As to the false, but significant, trail to the shed in the wood, from which the boys originally fetched their ladder, that is another, more abstruse, problem.

The ‘target’ had, I suppose, both handled the ladder and walked along the track I followed to and from the shed, thus leaving a subtle (? radiesthetically perceptible) trail, though some hours old, that a dog might have followed by scent, even if a human being could not normally do so.

On the other hand, when baffled in my first and more direct attempt to find the boy, I might conceivably have switched to a telepathic, ESP faculty in order to get the idea of the shed in the wood.

I might even have utilised that yet more remarkable psychic faculty known as retro-cognition, or backward travelling in time, so as to gain some faint clairvoyant impression of the past event. But that seems most improbable in the circumstances, judging by my personal impressions at the time.

To decide, between telepathy and radiesthesia in such a case, it would be needful first to attempt the same feat without any specific ‘sample’ or ‘witness’, supposed to provide syntonisation with the target; and that was not done, unfortunately. In bomb tests and numerous other experiments, however, the ‘sample’ was found to be essential to success in direction-finding by dowsing, as the late W. H. Trinder would have readily confirmed had he still been alive.

As for pure chance and guesswork leading me to those two precise spots in Mr. Budgett’s great park and gardens, in a beeline for the target, obviously such an interpretation would be ludicrous.

Dowsing Your To-Do List

By Susan Rose

The American Dowser, Winter 2017

Ask any experienced dowser and you will hear that dowsing is one of the most useful skills anyone can acquire in life. Most people's top-of-mind associations with the word dowsing - after an initial surprise that anyone 'normal' might be trained in dowsing at all - are related to finding wells and searching for underground water sources.

Water dowsing is by no means the only use of this valuable skill today. Dowsing does not require inherited or psychic skills and anyone can learn to use a pendulum or dowsing rod effectively and accurately with some instruction!

If you consider how amazing it is today that you can head to Google or YouTube for answers to just about any question, imagine how wonderful it can be to use a kind of Cosmic Google for answers you might think are unknowable! Welcome to the modern science of using a pendulum or dowsing rod to dowse for information.

Using a dowsing tool to prioritize a daily to-do list creates daily momentum, effectiveness, a greater sense of accomplishment in having addressed the priorities of the day - and better results in our life.

New behavioural science links all of this to increased happiness! It would seem that taking advantage of the wisdom offered, not only from your wise subconscious, but also from the cosmic energies you are connected to. Live more productively, peacefully and even joyfully over time.

I invite you to experiment with this ancient science to tune into your invisible guidance system for dowsing 'the little things' in your daily life. This writing offers some practical ways to use dowsing for getting things done.

Using Dowsing in Daily Life

Dowsing can be used for any type of questions, at any time that an answer might be constructive, useful or beneficial. Any time you hear yourself or someone else say, “I don't know,” I'd like you to think, “Use dowsing” instead! I use dowsing in my research, in my business and in my personal life to get answers and to make decisions all the time. I apply the concept of dowsing to logically unknowable answers in all aspects of my life, including “What should I do next?”

A simple way of using dowsing that has a demonstrated effect on improving the quality of life is asking about your daily schedule and to-do list. Is there a best order of things? Are there things on your list you needn't bother with? As it turns out, the answer is yes, and applying this to daily life brings phenomenal, concrete results. You can accomplish more tasks, more effectively - and raise your level of happiness. Let's have a look.

Create an Effective To-Do List

One of the easy things that you can do is create an effective list, not a ‘chore list,’ but simply a list of the things that you could be doing on any day. In the same way that you make a grocery list, make a list of what you could be doing now, or today, to make the best use of your time and energy. Prepare meals? Clear the clutter, organize a space, or get set for your day?

Your subconscious keeps track of all the things you thought you might do, just as it tracks all your thoughts on everything. The cosmos, as I like to teach people, keeps track of the really big picture. When you use dowsing, you put your resources to work for creating the ‘Ultimate Productivity and Time Management System’. If I hear a distinct lack of enthusiasm, let me assure you there is also an ‘Ultimate Beneficial Purpose’ to all this!

Dowse to Maintain Good Energy at Home

My interest is the development of higher human potential. I believe we all can do much more with our lives than we are told we can, and that we have vast untapped potential. Unleashing more of this potential allows you more energy to use for the good of the planet, for the good of mankind, or to bring happiness to the world.

Dowse to Complete Half Finished Projects

The mystery of why many people perform well at work but may be less organized when it comes to their personal life comes down to focus. Without a 'boss' and enforced deadlines at home, there are just too many options. Many people get stalled halfway through one thing and then start another.

Many people are challenged by simply moving in an organized fashion through the day to get things done. You can learn to coach yourself into better productivity by using dowsing! Would it not be helpful to know what is most important for you to do right now to keep a happy balance and get things finished with reduced stress and maximum impact? Let's see how dowsing can help you to do just that.

Moving Through the Day to Get Things Done

Learning to use dowsing and a daily system will help you do more in less time and feel a real sense of accomplishment! Using dowsing in this way is a little like hiring a life coach - for yourself!

Let's see how this works. Along with the major projects that you have in mind, your daily list might include a few of the humdrum things that adults need to do, like dishes and laundry or preparing lunch!

Without the focus and deadlines of being at work, research shows that people who work from home or who are retired need to find a way to create their own forward momentum to get things done. Project completion is one of the core aspects of personal happiness.

Creating a 'Low Priority Domestic List'

Creating a 'low priority' list of domestic activities creates happiness? If that's true, I'm in! This low priority list helps me finish what I start and - importantly for many people - to not start what I can't easily finish, or unimportant projects.

My low priority list on any typical day might have a number of things on it, including weed the garden, can the peaches, move items off a counter related to my peaches canning project. It also has really simple, short kitchen tasks, such as empty the dishwasher or put the potatoes on for dinner.

These things may seem totally self-evident or unnecessary to put on a list, but they're useful to include. When I discovered dowsing for low priority items, my productivity went up, my stress level went down, I was in good shape at the end of the day - and my overall happiness quotient increased!

When you list all these simple things you need to do, you can then get to them systematically, in a timely manner. This is particularly useful for accomplishing the list of things you need to do when cleaning up or while preparing to leave the house for a few days - while at the same time lowering stress levels and getting the important things done.

Expecting Company?

I used this method a few months ago when I was preparing for an important visit from family I see seldom, and I didn't have much time to get myself or the house into what I felt was 'company ready status.' I trust you will identify with this situation, either as the person expecting company, or the guest who arrives to a frazzled host. If you don't do this yourself, you probably recognize the tired host who has obviously done the classic 'too much' that almost no one else appreciates and is too tired to enjoy their own event! With my handy list, on the other hand, I found I worked efficiently, quickly and was so pleased with my results and not in the least stressed. Furthermore, it seemed that I had addressed exactly the things that turned out to be important for this visit.

The Ultimate To-Do List System

Here's what I did that you can try. Make a list of about eight to ten things you think you need to do, in this case before your visitors arrive. Next, include the all important something else or other that you add to the end of the list so that you create a complete list of task possibilities. Your list of tasks is now complete, but needs one final touch: the addition of an item called none of the above, which I use to indicate I am to abandon all these ideas for now (and go outside or do something else).

From these possibilities, now you are going to use your pendulum or dowsing rod to choose three priorities to start with. My method is to write the list (sometimes on the back of an envelope), and then take a pendulum to dowse the priorities. I turn my list on its side so the lines of my writing are vertical instead of horizontal, and intentionally less easy to read, and then ask to be shown the highest priority task to do first. I consciously avoid reading my list items to disengage my logical brain, and simply follow where the pendulum swings.

In this instance, there were a number of things on the list that I could have been doing to prepare for company. Some of them were tidying things up, others were making food. I itemized the short list of things that I thought might be of importance, and added several less important things I was planning to do. I didn't censor myself, but just quickly listed my thoughts to create about ten options.

When I asked for the highest priority, lo and behold my pendulum went straight to number six on my list of nine things. I put an encircled (1) beside this item. Then I saw what it was, number six was to make the chocolate chip cookies! That really made me smile, because I know my rational brain was definitely disengaged for this exercise! Making cookies was the last thing that I expected to be a top priority. Clearly something else besides me and my logical brain were at work here.

But I also understood a kind of cosmic logic, because my company was coming the next day, and if I were running out of time, I most certainly would not be making those cookies!

If I didn't hop to making those chocolate chip cookies first, the odds were good that I probably wouldn't get to them. Who knew that they were such a fun and cosmically important part of entertaining?

Once you get your first priority, ask for the second and the third. As you complete these items, you can check to see what's next. I don't ever drowse the order of the entire list. I simply ask for the highest priority until three items are selected.

What my pendulum showed me to do next on the company coming list (after making those chocolate chip cookies), was to clear the 'to-do' project items off the counter, and then start making one of the lunch dishes I wanted well ahead of time. After I checked off two things on my list, next I found I was to address the back room where the photo albums were, which by the way, is where my visitors ended up!

Some of the other things that I thought were important, included getting the chairs and table ready outside on the deck, or weeding the front garden, or straightening up the hallway cupboard. Some of the other things that I thought I might need to do, did not come up as priorities. On the other hand, putting cut flowers into a vase for the living room was again cosmically high up on the list.

Real Benefits

What this simple list-making does, although it may seem silly or trivial, is allow you to move forward with confidence and speed, knowing you are doing the right tasks and the most important things first. My system was validated by the focus of conversation, comments and feedback from my guests. In the future, using this system, I can be entirely confident that my company will notice the things that I have done, that I have not done anything unnecessary and that nothing is left undone that might be an irritant!

While you may not be expecting company, you can most certainly enhance your life with dowsing what to do on any given day among those low priority tasks. One of the additional things that using this system fosters is moving quickly through any task, with entire confidence, to get things done quickly. Try it! You may find that removing the indecision creates momentum and that you are entirely happy with the results.

What To Do On Any Given Day

If you have a long list of to-do's at your house, I invite you to use this simple system to ease your stress and allow you to tackle things as they seem important to your cosmic self, and not to your 'logical,' stressed out self! Your tidy and de-clutter domestic list might start out something like this:

Kitchen	Kitchen - fridge
Living room	Living room - china cabinet
Bedroom	Bedroom - closet
Hall closets	Hall closets - footwear
Foyer	Foyer - the clutter
Basement	Basement - winter clothing
Somewhere else	Basement - other
None of these	Somewhere else

Your questions are always about 'What is the best use of my time and energy right now?' with the purpose of making your life better for serving others or fulfilling your potential in some way.

The caveat? While you may become somewhat preoccupied with your specific project, other areas of your life are waiting. Please make sure you add to any and every list you have created an item clearly labelled ‘none of the above’. Sometimes what you need to do now is not related to this at all! The best use of your time and energy may be for you to head out to the world, and to get away from your domestic scene altogether!

Here are a few tips for integrating more dowsing into your life.

Practical Tips: Integrating Daily Dowsing

Keep a Pendulum Handy. I use a pendulum and have it with me or on my person all of the time. It travels in a pocket, overnights in a small tray on my dresser and goes back into another pocket every day. I can reach for it at any moment. I hope you are reading this with pendulum or rods at hand. Life becomes easier when you use a dowsing tool and paper for decision-making.

Learn to Use ‘Fan Scales’

Learn to use a simple ‘fan scale’ with a low value at one side and high value at the other. Train yourself to easily rank anything from low to high on whatever scale you choose, using whatever terms you like. For domestic de-cluttering, for example, all you really need is a simple scale that represents priority. Your question can be simply “low or high?” Avoid “Yes or No” Answers if Possible.

Most of our lives are spent making decisions and weighing the pros and cons of any action. You can certainly ask “this or that,” but it is usually more helpful to rate these options. What if both your “this or that” options are less advantageous than something else? You won't know unless you have rated them both and obtain a 15 and 20 % positive choice! That would help you know you need to rethink the options!

Ensure an Accurate ‘Yes or No’ Response

While “Yes or No” may not always be the best way to ask questions, it is really important to have a consistent and accurate “Yes or No” response as part of your repertoire. Find your most accurate and rapid way of getting 'yes or no' consistently.

Daily Dowsing for Practical Decision Making

I love using practical dowsing that moves me forward in the 'Big Picture'. Dowsing can help you move forward towards fulfilling your own potential so you can best honour the life you've been given and serve the universe. Ah yes, I always ask, but what do I need to do, right now, today, to help with that? If that's the 'Big Picture', what then is the daily, practical picture? The practical picture is directed by the many small decisions you make each day.

Let your dowsing help you every step of the way. So many good things happen in life when you use dowsing often, including enhanced brain function! I use my dowsing every day for everything. I dowse what to do and when; I dowse what to de-clutter and what to leave alone; I dowse what I need to do to raise the vibration of my home environment. It's all fun and I hope you enjoy your dowsing as much as I do!

The Two Temple Tour

On Sunday 25th May, eleven fellow dowsers travelled down to Wolongong in a very comfortable 12 seater bus supplied by the Hunters Hill Community Group and driven by Rai, to the Nan Tien Buddhist Temple. As soon as we arrived we could feel the energy change to that of serenity, spirituality and devotion.

Our guide was Sandra, who is a local and has watched the Temple grow over the years. She gave us a detailed history as she guided us around the compound to the different Temples, Meditation Rooms, the Gratitude Bell, Museum and Pagoda.

The different forms of Buddha were explained as well as all the ceremonies, practices and customs involved. It was an informative, peaceful and energising experience being there.

I observed some of us were dowsing the energies as we explored the various areas. I for one will go back on a week day and spend more time meditating and experiencing this peaceful energy.

On our way back to Sydney we also visited the Sri Venkateswara Hindu Temple. It was totally different from the Buddhist Temple, but the community feeling here was also amazing. It was truly a working Temple for the people.

Dowsing Seminar

May 6th, 2018

Jill Turland was our guest speaker on Homeopathy at the September 2017 meeting. Her presentation was very well received and we now have a chance to deepen our understanding of homeopathy with some hands on training and exercises.

Jill intends to show how to make remedy cards for the radionic homeopathic remedy maker using dowsing as a tool. It is not uncommon, these days, to need to make up a card - say for a flower essence, remedy or medical drug for which a card has not been supplied.

Jill will also be talking about her treatments and vast knowledge of homeopathy, and will be happy to discuss any questions you may have regarding homeopathy and dowsing. Please bring your pendulums.

Who should attend: Anyone interested in homeopathy or wanting to discover the benefits of homeopathy.

The participants will receive seminar notes and morning & afternoon tea will be provided.

What to bring: Bring: a pendulum, notebook, pen, drinking water.

About your Tutor: Jill Turland began by studying Homeopathy and Herbal Medicine. For many years Jill has been associated with osteopaths and chiropractors. Of special interest to us is that Jill also incorporates dowsing in her work as a homoeopath.

When: Sunday May 6th, 2018, arrive at 9.30am for 10.00 sharp start. Finish at 4pm.

Where: Community Hall, 44 Gladesville Road, Hunters Hill, Sydney, NSW.

Library News

One of our members was impressed with one of our new books and has written a review:

Pendulum Mojo by Amy Scott Grant:

How to use truth testing for clarity, confidence and peace of mind.

This book has given me a whole new outlook on ways to play with my pendulum and the body.

The points of view and descriptions make sense and are very playful.

Amy has a wonderful sense of humour and the book is full of informative ways to utilise the tools and be at ease & grace while mastering the practice of dowsing.

Magic reading, enjoyed every page.....feeling confident now.

Overcoming Inner Blocks

- Silvana LaPegna -

Silvana's experience as a self-transformation coach and medical intuitive has given her invaluable knowledge. Based in Sydney, Silvana's clients range from local to global. Even when she is working with international clients by Skype, she can still 'see' their challenges and opportunities.

Do you feel stuck in moving towards what you want, like there's an invisible block between you and it? Do you feel overwhelmed about taking any action, or need to make things happen in your life? Maybe you're taking lots of action, but progress is slow and opportunities and results just aren't showing as you hoped.

Sometimes we overlook our own intuitive flashes and impulses because we have a fixed rational idea of what we should do with our lives. Other times we overlook the signs because we want our choices to be acceptable to our partners, family, friends or peers. We think we'll feel better with their validation, but in reality, we need to fully accept what we want for ourselves.

Silvana will show us what is behind these presentations of resistance, and how you can work through them towards what you desire with less stress and more enjoyment.

To get the most out of this event, tune in and listen deeply and I guarantee you'll have a stack of 'light bulb' moments. One of those could literally change your life.
