No Meeting due to Easter.

Wishing you all
a very Happy Easter!

See you all in May!

From the Editor

The March meeting was the setting for our yearly AGM. Our newly elected President is Martine Negro and our new Vice-President is Olga Kosterin. Congratulations to you both. Most of the committee stay as per last year. We are very grateful for the amazing work that our committee does behind the scenes.

As you can see on the left, we do not have a meeting in April due to Easter. The month of May will be an action-packed month for dowsing. Maggie Lowe will be running a dowsing seminar. Every year the seminars get better and better.

Maggie learned to dowse at a similar dowsing seminar many years ago. Encouraged to push the boundaries, she made wonderful discoveries in health, garden, environment and lost objects. She has conducted beginners', intermediate, garden, interactive and dietary seminars for the Society and was voted 'Dowser of the Year' in 2014.

This seminar is also for confirmed dowsers who want to sharpen their skills. There is always something for all levels of competency in Maggie's seminars. You will find details of the seminar on page 22 as well as a registration form. This is also on our website. Make sure to book early as there is always a lot of demand for this special type of tuition.

Do you know why eggs are associated with Easter?

The Eastern tradition relates that after the Ascension, Mary Magdalene travelled to Rome and visited the Emperor Tiberius. She was a woman of great standing, in spite of what the Church said later on about her.

She proclaimed to him about Christ's Resurrection. She used an egg as a symbol of the Resurrection. Tiberius responded that no one could rise from the dead, any more than the egg she held could turn red.

Miraculously, the egg immediately began to turn red as testimony to her words. Happy Easter Egg hunting.

Until next time,

François

An Interview with Greg Storozuk

*By Nancy Nelson
American Society of Dowsers, Summer 2018*

Greg Storozuk has been a full-time professional dowser for over 30 years. He is a past president of the American Society of Dowsers, and is founder of the Mile High Dowsers, based in Denver.

In addition to working for commercial clients, Greg uses dowsing to locate toxic energy grids, to rid houses of ghosts, for entity clearings and, of course, to locate water. His four booklets for beginning dowsers (available in ASD's store) are considered classics in the dowsing field: 'Asking Questions,' 'Geopathic Zones and the Iron Stake Method,' 'Getting Started' and 'How to Dowse a Water Well.'

Nancy Nelson (NN): The idea that many people have of dowsing, is that it was something done in the 'olden days' to find water because people didn't have the scientific knowledge that we have now. Is dowsing still relevant in a world that enjoys modern technology?

Greg Storozuk (GS): Definitely. In the modern world, locating underground potable water is only one example of what can be accomplished by an experienced dowser, but the proof is what shows dowsing's worth. Basically, dowsing is a simple "Yes/No" language that anyone can learn, but it can be applied in a myriad of ways. It has evolved over the years along with everything else, but the difficulty in learning to dowse properly with consistent results is to first learn the basics, and by this I mean learning Natural Laws. Dowsing is a simple skill but it's not easy to learn. At its very root is simplicity. Utter simplicity. Natural Law.

Although most water wells in the U.S. are now located using modern methods, people should keep in mind that using a dowser is also an option. There are three good reasons to use a dowser: dowsing is cheaper, in many instances dowsing is more accurate, and dowsers can locate viable water wells more rapidly than geologists. Of course, results will vary with the experience of the dowser.

NN: How so?

GS: It's like a child wanting to be a policeman. He gets all excited and acts out the part, but would you trust him with a real gun? It takes a while to get a proper dowsing education and enough experience to learn the basic skills. Many people say, "Hey.. This is easy!" But nothing could be further from the truth. Especially if they expect accuracy in their applications.

One example of a typical dowsing job was when a client hired me to locate a well on his property, which was at the top of a hill. Both logic and a geologic survey suggested that a person would be more likely to encounter water by drilling at the bottom of a hill - and there actually was a driller busy at the bottom of the hill when I drove by - but my client's property was at the top. It took me less than half an hour to make a location that I told him would yield a well that would produce 90 gallons per minute at less than 132 feet.

The location was on a steep rise - it was so steep that they had to dig out a level place for the drill rig to stand. Then at a depth of 110 feet they hit water that flowed at 90 gallons a minute. They didn't drill any deeper because the water was flowing so fast they were afraid it would knock the rig over.

The driller at the bottom of the hill, who I passed when I first went to my client's property, drilled over 1,000 feet down and only found water that ran at half a gallon per minute.

NN: Taking the example above, how long does it take to become reasonably accurate at water dowsing?

GS: That depends on the amount of time spent in the field experiencing water dowsing. Asking the proper questions is paramount. If you ask, "Is there any water here?," the answer would be "Yes" because there's humidity in the air, dew on the grass, a puppy just walked by, and so on. But if the dowser asks a more specific question, something like, "Is there any underground, live, potable, flowing water here?" The answer may be different.

I should also mention that it isn't necessary to spend a lot of money to dig a well, since it all depends on the questions you ask. You could ask, "Is there any underground live, flowing, potable water here less than one foot deep?" in your own backyard, and use a garden trowel or shovel to dig a shallow hole. It's great practice.

NN: I understand from information I've found in books and on the internet that dowsing is not just for water anymore. It's used to locate people and lost objects, to improve health, to identify geopathic energy and stress zones, and as a method for divination. Has dowsing always been used for these purposes, or is this something new?

GS: This is not new; dowsing has evolved with the times and has been applied in a myriad of ways. That said, most new dowsers miss a huge part of their early dowsing education by failing to pinpoint underground water accurately. Water is essential for survival. What good is it to play hit and miss with another field of dowsing endeavour, if you can't locate something as basic as water? First things first; otherwise, it's like not learning the alphabet before trying to write a novel.

But dowsing can be used for many different things. Mining, for example, is a traditional dowsing task. Cornwall in Great Britain has a history of mining. What few people know is that the British imported German miners who were also dowsers to help locate new mines in Cornwall. And it seems that dowsers have been used to locate mines in Germany for over 1,000 years.

Dowsing is also used in archeology - I've done it myself. I went with a teacher friend to watch his son play a soccer game at his school.

My friend told me that the remains of an old church were on the school property, but no one knew exactly where they were. He knew the general location, but couldn't find any evidence of walls or a foundation, so during halftime we walked around the property.

I hadn't brought my Y-rod so I fashioned one by taking a piece of long grass and folding it over. Within a few minutes I located all four walls of the church by dowsing - I marked them with sticks. I also marked other areas with sticks where I said he should investigate. We were back at the game before halftime was over.

The next week my friend called me to say that he had taken his students to investigate the area where I had indicated the church was located. They were able to find the walls where I had marked them with sticks, and from that were able to find the corners of the church. All the other places I had marked with sticks they found something from the period - a button, coins, or some thing similar.

NN: When you are contacted by a client to dowse their house, what do you do? What are you looking for?

GS: I'm always dowsing for geopathic zones - also referred to as geopath. There are three different kinds: natural zones, like fissures, faults and fractures; man-made zones, like electrical; and combination zones, like a telephone transformer over an underground water vein. The first thing I do is check the house for the Hartmann grid. The health of the house is determined by the distance between the Hartmann grid lines - the closer together the lines the less healthy the house. Once I establish the location of the Hartmann grid, I dowse for entities.

NN: Entities? Are you talking about ghosts? Is this very common?

GS: Yes, ghosts. And, yes, they're common. Oftentimes when people die their energy remains - and this energy can maintain itself using the energy from geopath.

One problem that occurs is that these entities can transfer their energy to people who are still living.

For example, a friend of mine came down with a sudden and serious case of arthritis in both his knees and his elbows - an ailment from which he hadn't suffered previously. I asked my friend whether anyone he knew had died recently.

He became quiet, then told me two uncles of his had died a few days apart just three weeks previously; one had arthritis in the knees, the other suffered from arthritis in the elbows. I told my friend not to worry, that he would be back to normal in the morning.

That evening I did what I do, saw that these entities had attached themselves to him, and sent them on their way. When my friend woke up the next day he no longer suffered from arthritis - and he hasn't since.

All houses have geopathic stress zones of one sort or another.

NN: All houses? You've never been in a house that was free of geopathes?

GS: Actually, over the years there have been three different instances where I've been in houses that had no geopathic zones of any sort. The people who lived in these three houses didn't know each other, but there was one thing that they had in common - they were all UFO experiencers; they had all observed, been contacted by or been abducted by UFOs.

For example, after I dowsed one of these houses and found no geopathes, I went a short distance away and started dowsing. I was about 60 feet away from the house at this point, and was able to locate the normal variety of geopathic stress zones. I started tracking one of these geopathes toward the house, and at about 50 feet away from the house it suddenly took a right angle turn.

All dowsers know that geopathic zones are straight; these are natural lines and they don't make right angle turns! I dowsed again with a different geopath and found the same thing - at about 50 feet away from the house the geopathic zone made a right angle turn. There were no geopathic zones near that house.

NN: That's curious. So did the folks who lived in these houses experience UFOs because there were no geopathic stress zones, or did the UFOs manipulate the geopathic zones for their own comfort after they made contact with these specific people?

GS: I don't know, but I think the UFOs manipulated the geopathes since right angles in geopathic zones shouldn't exist.

NN: OK, do you have another memorable example of dowsing for a non-water related issue?

GS: I was called in by a business to dowse its office building. Everything was fine except for one office on the bottom level - it had very strong geopathic stress indicators, and frankly, it felt uncomfortable just to be there. I did some things to alleviate the issue, then left. I followed up with the client about a year later to see whether things had worked out. He told me that his company had never been able to retain the employees who worked out of that office - they always left within a few weeks of starting.

A new employee began work in that office a week after I had dowsed and, a year later, was still there. That was 10 years ago, and I believe that same employee is still happily working out of that same office.

NN: It seems clear that dowsing has moved beyond the simple ‘man with a stick’ method. What are some of the other tools that dowers use today?

GS: Dowsing tools have remained relatively the same over the years - Y-rods, L-rods, pendulums, and bobbars - but they have gotten fancier and more expensive. Some people ascribe certain meanings to certain tools, but to me it's irrelevant. In MY world, the mind is the tool. What you hold in your hand is like a needle on a meter. It just measures what your mind says after you've asked a question.

I've used plastic street sweeper bristles and tall pieces of grass folded over to make a Y-rod with successful results. The material is irrelevant in my personal opinion, but if you believe it makes a difference, then it becomes so. Many years ago one of my teachers said, “Tell yourself you can dowse at anytime, anywhere, and with anything”. I then bought a $265 L-rod because it worked for me. Soon after I realized I could do the same thing with a bent coat-hanger or welding rod, so I now use that expensive rod as an example to show people what not to buy.

Once again – it's simplicity that needs to be learned, but there are some expensive experiences you have to go through first.

NN: What modern technology in use today has replaced what was previously done by dowsing?

GS: The business of locating liquids and underground anomalies such as water, oil, and earthquake faults, has replaced the simple Y-rod with very expensive and complex electronic equipment. This is a part of mankind's technical evolution.

The interesting thing though is that a good dowser can duplicate these devices' purpose and, on many occasions, exceed them using less time and expense. I know you're already familiar with the 10-year study by Professor Hans Dieter Betz, sponsored by the German government. The results showed that experienced dowsers had a 96% success rate at locating potable water in third world countries in which geological conditions were particularly difficult for finding water, vs. a 21% success rate for geologists using 'modern' methods.

NN: Aside from an experienced dowser being able to locate water wells more accurately and at a lower cost than traditional geologists, are there any other differences?

GS: A big difference is the type of water we look for and find. Dowsers look for 'flowing water veins', water that's rising up from deep in the earth.

Geologists, on the other hand, often focus on aquifers - underground geological formations where water 'pools', generally after rainwater and snow-melt seep down from the surface.

Dowsers prefer not to tap the aquifers for a couple of reasons. The first is that using water from aquifers is not sustainable; they will eventually run dry if they are oversubscribed. The Ogallala Aquifer, which runs under parts of Kansas, Texas, Nebraska and a few other states, is an example of this.

The second reason is that since aquifers have solid bottoms, they can become polluted by different things - pesticides, nitrogen fertilizers, fracking water, and chemicals, etc. Dowsing for water rising up from deep in the earth will give you a water supply that is sustainable, secure, and healthy.

To get an idea of how flowing water veins are created, you need to remember that gravity will pull water from the bottom of the oceans toward the centre of the earth, which is hot. Heat and water together produce steam, which is a pressure. And as a pressure, steam seeks to escape upward, condensing into fresh water the further it gets from its source, and leaving behind the heavier minerals from the sea water.

As the hot water rises toward the surface, it follows pathways already opened by other smaller sources, widening them into what a dowser refers to as a 'water dome.' These domes would be the equivalent of a tree trunk, with the smaller veins being the root system. Many of these domes have been around for ages, and are considerably wide, some carrying thousands of gallons of water per minute, if not more.

The fact that dowsers focus on flowing water veins is another reason some researchers say that dowsers are able to locate underground water.

They claim the flowing water sends out an electrical charge that dowsers are able to detect, similar to the way an electrical wire can turn the needle on a compass.

Maybe so, but it still doesn't account for map dowsing.

NN: How do people become dowsers today? Do they need to have some sort of innate knack for it or can people learn it by taking a class?

GS: The first thing is to have a desire to learn how to dowse. Like everything else, anyone can learn to do something if they have the desire to learn - like paint, play a guitar, golf, etc., so that's an important factor.

The next thing, the driving force, is the strength of that desire. The stronger the better if you truly want to learn. Reading dowsing books or taking a class will get you started, but most likely there will be prejudices from the authors and instructors - just like me telling people to learn how to dowse for water first.

But the main thing is to start with the basics, the simple ABCs. Read about Natural Law and learn how to think simply and logically. The next step is to experiment. Learn how to use dowsing tools to develop your own personal reactions to "Yes" and "No" answers. It's important to not only ask the proper questions, but to ask ones that are ONLY answerable by "Yes" or "No." After that? Practice, practice, practice on simple things.

Counting is simple and offers immediate feedback. Ask, "How many M&M's are in this snack pack? At least 4? 5? 6?" until you get a "No" answer. But don't open the bag yet. Instead, ask more questions. "How many M&M's in this snack pack are yellow? Light brown? Blue? Red?" Then open the bag and check your results.

Playing cards are another example. Cut the deck anywhere and ask "How many cards are in this stack?" Another is to ask "Is the top card black?" and start two piles.

NN: What do you think is the most misunderstood thing about dowsing today?

GS: That dowsing is folklore or witchcraft. It's just a natural human ability owned by everyone, which is seldom used anymore in spite of its veracity. If someone tells me they don't believe in dowsing, I always ask, "Have you ever tried it?" "...Uh No" Then, "Have you ever read anything about it?" Another "No."

Then how can you form an intelligent opinion on something you know nothing about? That usually silences the sceptics.

NN: If there was one thing you could teach people about dowsing, what would that be?

GS: That while dowsing is simple, it's not easy to become a good dowser. One of my teachers told a class of over 100 people that, "If you're not willing to take a chance, and you're not willing to fail, then you're NOT a dowser." His point was that experience is the best teacher.

There's no need to fear failure when you're just practicing. Too many people are fearful of making errors. Another of my teachers told the class, "I don't learn from my successes; I expect them. I learn from my mistakes." Good advice!

The most important thing, however, is to realize how simple the universe really is. People have to believe in themselves. After all, THAT is the basis of everything.

Are You Being of Service to the World?

By Patti Conklin

Ozark Research Institute newsletter, Spring 2019

There are times, when I'm taking a deep breath, I think about this question; 'How are we of Service to our World?' I attempt to do the absolute best work I can. I work within my integrity and honesty. I value myself and all those whom I interact with. I attempt, within the best of my ability, to help and serve with humility and consciousness.

But what DOES 'Being of Service' really mean? Is it greatness, achieving political heights? Traveling the world as an ambassador, teacher, singer, author, actor ... etc.. you get my drift I'm sure ... Are we of service only when we achieve acclaim and foresight for the betterment of the entire world?

As I was arriving back from vacation on January 6th, the United States Government had shut down. I went through customs and the airport, thanking each employee for coming to work and that I appreciated them.

This morning, I took my garbage out just as the garbage truck was pulling up. I watched the guy jump off the back of the truck and get my extra garbage while the mechanical arm picked up the bin.

As I watched, he smiled, waved and they headed down to the next house.

After that I left to go pick up groceries. As the grocery store worker brought my groceries to my car, I thanked that person as I got back in my car .... and it hit me .... EACH OF THESE PEOPLE WERE BEING OF SERVICE TO ME, TO THEIR COMMUNITY!

Reality shift in gear... each and every single one of us, no matter what we do, if we are paid or unpaid.. we are of service to each other. How many times do we take our fellow humans for granted by not realizing that THEY are being of service to us, just as we are being of service to them. It's a thought that I hope we all think about with greater depth... no matter what you do in your life... you are being of service. You don't need fame, you don't need notoriety, you need you.

Payment is a way we 'qualify' whether or not we are successful. In the old days, we bartered. We didn't care who had what wealth - we cared about whether or not they had a cord of wood for our 2 bales of hay. We didn't judge by assets we accepted by generosity. We loved in our humility and kindness towards one another.

We haven't always had a great track record in our history of service. Some took instead of giving, many were forced to give without it being reciprocated. I guess the point I'm making is this. Treat every single person you see, day to day, once in a lifetime, as someone who is being of service to you, and in return, with your smile, you're giving back, that you are forever in service to the world.

You may just be one lone soul within the world... but your worth is as great as anyone else's. There is no quick way to the heights of wealth or success, that dear friends, is done within the quality and breadth of your own heart.

A Spirit Cleansing

By Richard Perrott

New Zealand Dowsers, March 2003

In November 1996, I received a message asking for help for a lady called Karen, who had just suffered a very traumatic experience.

I wrote to her and suggested that they send a sketch of the plan of the house by airmail. I then mentally placed a protective psychic shield around Karen and her son Nigel, keeping each of them from any further psychic harm.

In December I received a plan of Karen's house (she is a single mother with, at that time, an eight-year old son), together with several photographs of the inside and outside of the house. Karen had told me in a letter of her frightening experience. She and Nigel had moved into the house about a year previously. One night she woke up with the feeling that someone was choking her. However, she put this down to possibly the fact that the bedding might have been rather tight about her throat, and went back to sleep.

Then in the November in question, she was asleep and woke to feel what appeared to be a heavy weight on top of her and the feeling of being raped. With some difficulty she pushed the weight off her body, and finding the room empty, ran out into the living room. Here she 'saw' the 'form' of an elderly woman sitting down with a bowl of something like gruel in one hand, and a spoon in the other.

This old woman said to her that she must "Say just one word." Next to the old woman was a still older man with a white beard. In the room there was also another bearded man. As Karen ran out into the kitchen these ghosts disappeared. She spent the remainder of the night in Nigel's room. She had her parish priest come to the house next day and say a Mass in that bedroom.

I started on my cleansing of the house by asking whether there were any noxious lines of energy running under or through the house. Yes, I found there to be two but was unable to locate them. I then asked whether I would be able to locate them when the spirits had been dealt with. Yes.

I then entered a meditative state and tried to locate myself in the house. I saw the three ghosts in question. I ascertained that the woman sitting in the chair was prematurely aged and was in her mid-fifties. The man standing beside her was her father and he was in his eighties. The other man, standing in the shadows on the other side of the room was in his thirties.

He was very powerfully built, had jet black hair and a square black beard. He was a lodger in the house. He worked in some kind of forestry job. There was a strange relationship present between these three, something I couldn't pinpoint, but which was disturbing. I was then conscious of the presence (I didn't see it) of a young woman in her early twenties, the daughter of the woman in the chair.

It was she who had been the victim of an attack in that bedroom by the bearded lodger; when the young woman cried out, he had tried to strangle her. However she tore herself away and fled from the house never to return.

Starting with the old woman, I talked with each spirit in turn; I told them that whatever they had done which was wrong, could be forgiven by a loving God if they were truly sorry. Would they please pray for help and go on to a higher plane where they would find peace and tranquility. As I said these thoughts to each spirit I too prayed for them and waited until both I, and they, saw and felt some spirit from the higher plane coming to meet with them. I felt satisfied that they each then departed. I placed a spirit shield above, below and around the house so that no spirits other than good angels may make their way in.

I next checked the plan to try to locate the two noxious underground streams. I was then easily able to locate them. One ran diagonally under Nigel's bed, diagonally under Karen's bed and emerged half way under the threshold of the front door. The other was parallel to the first, and ran diagonally across the dining room and emerged from the house where the dining room met the living room.

Both of these noxious streams followed underground streams of water. They were both quite strong.

Noxious streams, which may be electromagnetic in origin, follow underground streams, fault lines, be associated with ore bodies, or result from microwave transmissions, and may affect persons physically, mentally and/or spiritually. They also act as magnets for spirits. Once a spirit is in a house it may attract other spirits. In any event I cleared both noxious energy and spirits from the house.

I returned the plans of the house to Karen, showing the previous location of the spirits and the noxious rays, together with a prayer to one's House Angel. I have had a couple of letters from Karen and a couple from her mother. They both tell me that there have been no other manifestations, and that the house now has a clean and fresh feeling that it lacked before. It turns out that there was a government forestry station just up the road from Karen's house which had been operative at the time in question, and could thus be the reason for the lodger being resident in that house at that time.

Finis, I trust, to that case.

Leave Room for Grace to Step In!

By Mariana Cooper (Mari)

Ozark Research Institute newsletter, Summer 2012

Are you feeling like you are in a constant state of yearning, striving and asking for your dreams to come true? Do you find yourself constantly saying affirmations, doing vision boards, asking open-ended questions etc.? Are you feeling weary from it all? I can relate! Believe me!

You know it is really easy to get in the habit of constantly asking for what we want with affirmations, questions, prayer etc. But if we are always asking, there is no room for receiving. This can actually slow you way down. Constantly asking over and over can often send a message of fear and worry. That energy, can hold what you want most, away from you!

I have found that a great way to make sure you are open and giving room to receive, is to have one day as an asking day, and the next as a receiving day where you just allow things to come to you. Think of your receiving day like your birthday! On that day you have an expectation that you will receive gifts, surprises, be celebrated, honoured and given lots of attention. But you don't go to everyone asking.

You allow them to come to you. They may have asked you what you want for your birthday ahead of time, you let them know and let it go right? That is exactly how to work with the energy of manifesting.

Give a little breathing room and space for GRACE to happen. Grace is when God's energy picks up your requests and brings them to fruition. No need to strive or do or push. Give Grace a chance to configure and watch how much easier and shorter the whole process becomes.

It will all come together sooner than you think!

International Dowsing Conference Update

The Early bird registration is open at <http://dowsingdownunder.com/> and will last until June. After that you will pay full price. Places are limited so make sure to register early not to miss out.

Every month until the conference opens, I will introduce one of the speakers. Today we look at Raymon Grace:

Raymon Grace, founder and president of Raymon Grace Foundation, is a dowser, lecturer and author of 3 books, 'The Future is Yours—Do Something About It', 'Techniques That Work For Me' and 'Seasons of April.'

He has created over 40 DVDs sharing information learned over the past 40 years. His books have been printed in English, Italian and Chinese. His work is being used in several countries for improving water and other areas of self improvement. His videos reached people in 142 countries. He has been a guest on numerous radio talk shows including the well know 'Coast to Coast Am Radio.' He has been recognised by the Virginia Senate for his work.

He is a down to earth plain spoken person who tells it as he sees it. His dress clothes are jeans and cowboy boots and he doesn't own a suit and tie. He's real.

Give Dowsing a Whirl, it could change your life!

Seminar with tutor Maggie Lowe - Sunday May 26th, 2019

At this relaxed, hands-on, interactive, practical seminar, beginning dowsers will learn the basics of 'what, why, how and when' from Maggie Lowe, who is an experienced tutor.

If you are a dowser already but feel a bit 'wobbly,' not confident in your ability, or your pendulum 'doesn't seem to be reliable,' these issues will be addressed.

Dowsing is a valuable life tool which will assist you to find answers to:

- Health and other issues for family, pets and livestock. How to plan good strategies for better health outcomes, both mainstream and complementary.
- Which foods harm or heal and how to choose those most suitable for you.
- Whether your home affects your health.
- Work and business and community questions.
- Finding lost objects, people, pets and underground water.
- Be more in tune with nature and save money in your gardening.
- Using natural energies to enhance your life in ways you never dreamed of!

Learn how to ask the right questions to produce accurate answers, participate in activities to build your dowsing confidence, learn to make and use dowsing charts and experience other tools such as divining rods and bobbars.

You will be shown other aspects of dowsing and the use of natural, subtle energies... for your own investigation later. But the main aim is to learn the basics, so you leave the Seminar as a confident dowser with a smile on your face, your world changed forever.

What to Bring: pendulum, notebook, pen, drinking water, water-resistant shoes and jacket (outdoor activity).

When: Sunday 26 May, arrive at 9.00am for 9.30 sharp start, ends 4pm.

Where: Community Hall, 44 Gladesville Road, Hunters Hill, Sydney, NSW, see page 28 for directions. (In the same room as our monthly meetings)

Library News

Library news:

We have a new book in the library that was donated by one of our members, we already have the DVD version of this, so I thought it may be good to have it in print as well.

The Secret by Rhonda Byrne

This is the blurb from Amazon:

In 2006, a groundbreaking feature-length film revealed the great mystery of the universe—The Secret—and, later that year, Rhonda Byrne followed with a book that became a worldwide best-seller.

Fragments of a Great Secret have been found in the oral traditions, in literature, in religions and philosophies throughout the centuries. In this book, you'll learn how to use The Secret in every aspect of your life—money, health, relationships, happiness, and in every interaction you have in the world.

You'll begin to understand the hidden, untapped power that's within you, and this revelation can bring joy to every aspect of your life.

The Secret contains wisdom from modern-day teachers—men and women who have used it to achieve health, wealth, and happiness

Speaker for May 19th, 2019

Lisa Gumienuk

- Space Clearing -

Lisa has a Degree in Business Management, a Diploma in Holistic Nutritional Therapies and certificates in Space Clearing (Energy Healing a Place), Food & Nutrition Coaching.

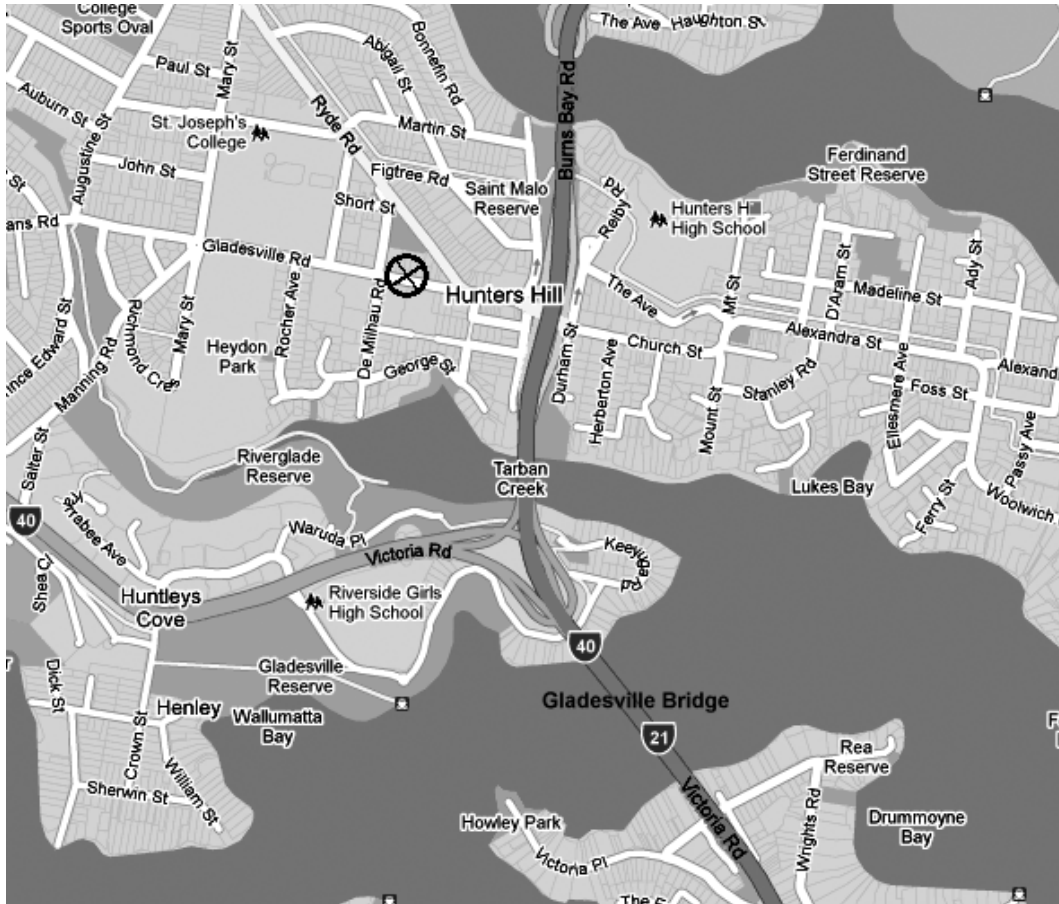

Do you have the feeling that something is not quite right in your home, workplace or business?

Lisa will be talking about the ins and outs of space clearing and how space clearing can re-balance the negative energy and how it can bring in positive energy and intentions into a space. Allowing stuck and blocked energy to be released can result in increased business productivity and profitability.

Lisa will share her journey and what brought her into the energetic healing realm and why she started space clearing. She will walk through a step-by-step guide of how a space clearing session is conducted - on-site & remote. Key tools and techniques along with their vibrational properties will be discussed as well as many examples of Lisa's space clearing sessions.

Chronic illness resulted in Lisa being housebound and unable to work for a number of years. Exploring over 100 tools and techniques to recover, Lisa found the dowsing society in 2016, and then a connection to and a love and passion for energy healing and techniques.
