The Gympie Pyramid

- Gordon de L. Marshall -

The Gympie pyramid, near Gympie in Queensland has long been a source of mystery and intrigue to visitors from around the world.

However, all this will come to an end in the near future if the Queensland government goes ahead with its plans to bulldoze the pyramid in order to construct a highway.

The Gympie pyramid is an archaeological anomaly and an important spiritual centre. When it was first discovered, the pyramid had inscribed standing stones and a round stone table on the summit surrounded by thirteen pillars, all since carted away by settlers for construction purposes. Fortunately drawings of them still exist.

Gordon has recently visited the pyramid and has spoken with the custodians. In this talk, he will show copies of the drawings as well as other interesting finds made on and around the pyramid, suggesting contact with earlier civilizations. Reasons as to why the pyramid is an ancient structure and its possible purposes will be discussed, and its connection with other pyramids found around Australia.

Gordon will also mention the experience of clairvoyants as to the interior of the pyramid, encounters with guardian spirits and examples of healing and higher consciousness experienced on it.

From the Editor

You might have noticed this column's change of title. I have held the secretary's position for several years now. During that time I have also been asked to be the newsletter editor, then to revamp and maintain the website, write the member database as well as countless other little things which, when put together, amount to a lot of things.

With the coming AGM in mind, I feel that it is time to give a chance to someone else to take the secretary's role, so that I can concentrate all the other projects I have put aside in my life, and maybe even have get a chance for a leisurely walk in the park every now and then.

So here is your chance, if you want to take some part in the running of your society, you are most welcome to join the committee. You will find a form on page 13 to register your intention to do so. If you do, but do not find two financial members to sign the form for you, do not worry, just send me the form with your name and the position you would like to hold, and you will be able to find someone at the meeting on the day to complete your form.

If you wish to vote for someone to fill in a particular position, but cannot attend the AGM meeting, you can use the proxy form on page 16 to get someone to vote on your behalf. The pre-requisite is that you both have to be financial members.

The seminar at the end of March is filling up nicely. These seminars are always both fun and very instructive. When you think of all the help that dowsing can provide you with, any help to improve your skills and accuracy is welcome. Do not miss out, Col and Julie Zwan are great dowers and have results to prove their skills.

Recently I called Col to get some help with a tricky situation. I was quite amazed with the written report he sent me, showing all the questions he asked for me, and the answers. All of them proved to be quite accurate and confirmed my own dowsing. So right away, I learned something about organising myself and formulating the right questions before beginning my dowsing. There is room to learn for everyone, experienced dowsers included.

You can register for this seminar at the March meeting or download a registration form, which includes all information, from our website at: http://www.dowsingaustralia.com/seminar\_Col\_2012.htm

This month is your last chance to renew your membership if you wish to continue receiving all the newsletters. You will find a form to do so on our website at:

Forms will also be available at the front desk at the March meeting.... do not miss out.

Last month's speaker, Robert Gourlay donated some DVD's, one of these will be used as a lucky door prize at the March Meeting.

Until next time....

Building Neutralising Antennae For Geopathic Zones

*From the American Dowsers quarterly digest, winter 1989
by Stephen Bosbach*

This article outlines the method of building a neutralising antennae for geopathic zones. There has been a great deal of work done in this area by the Germans and Swiss recently. An article in the 'American Dowsers Quarterly' described a passive antenna from Germany described as 'interferenz Mikrowellensender', or neutralizing microwave antenna. I obtained one of these devices and began experimenting with it. I found it to be quite effective in neutralizing the irritating radiation at a geopathic zone of two intersecting faults or veins, if the device was located upstream, directly over the center of the vein or fault, oriented vertically. This device is still available from Endotronic, in Argenbuhl, Germany for about $132.00 U.S. My design is equally effective and can be made for pennies.

The heart of the German device is a passive vertical dipole antenna, made from aluminum tubing and short lengths of aluminum rod, mounted coaxial up the center of the tubing. The length dimensions are somewhat critical, but the antenna can be made from simple materials and remain equally effective. I experimented with many materials and lengths to find the limits of effective size and configuration. The best and simplest design I eventually used was a folded dipole, made from 300 ohm flat TV antenna hook up wire, commonly available.

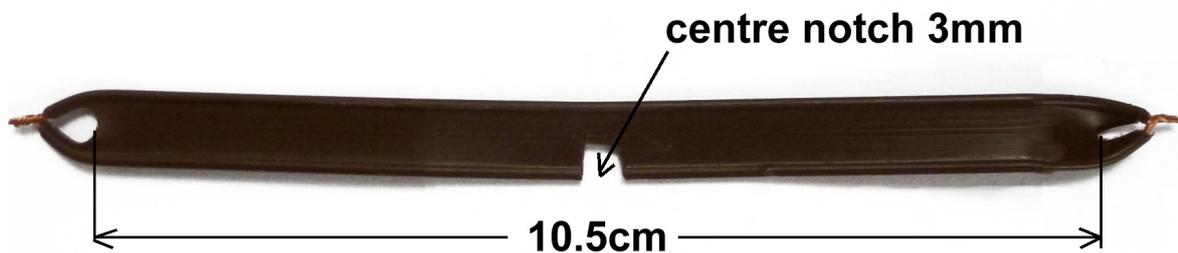

When a geopathic zone is located, determine the number of veins and faults intersecting with the zone. Each vein or fault has a flow of energy that coincides with the flow of water in the vein. The microwave energy emanating from the vein or fault is dowsed for its wavelength. This energy generally is centered in the 11 cm wavelength region. My dowsing, however, has found significant deviations from this.

I have dowsed veins and faults radiating at wavelengths from 6.5 to 19 cm. The antenna must be cut to equal the wavelength or half of it. I feel that the half wavelength antenna is effective and easier to install.

Around my home near Austin, Texas, the wavelength tends to be around 13cm. This equals a half wavelength antenna length of 6.5cm.

for wave length of 21cm

Construction: I then cut a piece of twin lead antenna wire 2 cm longer than the half wavelength to compensate for wire stripped to connect the ends. A 1cm of wire is stripped of insulation at each end and twisted together. A one 3 mm gap is then cut in center of one side of the antenna, see image above.

The exact center of flow is then dowsed in each vein or fault, and the antenna placed vertically over the center, upstream from the irritation zone. The small size of the antenna makes it easy to mount on walls or floor joists, using tape or staples.

The neutralizing effect seems to be permanent as long as the ground is stable. This may need to be checked periodically. I was able to completely neutralize the geopathic irritation in a home in Denver, by stapling these small antennae to the floor joists, at perimeter points in the basement.

Mindless Missions?

by Janie Tate, reprinted from the American Society of Dowzers Quarterly Digest Summer 2003

It is called 'Mindless Missions' because it doesn't seem like there is any plan, or intention, to start a chain of events. We just feel an energy and we do it. It's probably happened to me many times, when I really wasn't aware how I was affecting fate when I did something seemingly unimportant. I'm sure it happens to a lot of people.

There are 2 times that stand out in my mind, when I became aware, that I definitely did start an important chain of events. Afterwards, on reflection, I had to admit that there was another energy that motivated me. The first time was quite a few years ago, when I was reading or watching television. I can't remember exactly, but I was sitting down and I suddenly got up and walked out the door, mindless as to why I felt I had to do that. I had no intention of going anywhere in particular. I just walked out the door.

Across the street in the mobile home park, lived a friendly little lady that I had waved to a couple of times and said "hello" as she was mowing the lawn. That's about as far as it went in the several months that I had lived there. This particular day, I got up out of my chair, crossed the street and walked over to her house and knocked on the back door. I had absolutely no conscious reason for doing that. When I did, I heard a voice inside calling for help! I went inside and found her on the floor.

She had fallen and hurt her back. She was a young, healthy, and pretty woman who needed to be on some sort of medication, and it would have been many, many hours until someone else found her. She required an ambulance.

That event sort of 'blew my mind'. I had yet to discover any connection with Angels, and had only learned to dowse for the purpose of finding water. It had been several years and I continued to be curious about it, but thought it had no other use and didn't really know where to find any information about it.

Imagine my excitement when I found the American Society of Dowsers and went to a conference. My excitement was amplified when I discovered I could ask other questions besides, "Where's the water?"

Since then, I have developed a series of signals enabling me to communicate with my Guardian Angel. Some things are very difficult to find out by just asking questions. I know now that we also get hunches, thoughts, and insights when they are trying to steer us in a certain direction. Such was the case last night, and I was so moved that I have to share it.

The same sort of 'mindless mission' happened. I was sitting on the couch watching the news, and suddenly got the urge to refill my bean bag chair, which was getting a little too flat.

Now, this was at a time when I should have felt the urge to go fix my dinner. It was almost dusk and I never start projects at dusk. To fill it I would have to bring in my ladder, lay it down on a support and gather some clothespins to fasten the open bag between the rungs. Then I had to fill a squirt bottle with water, to neutralize the static electricity of the filling material, and go out to the shed and find my plastic bag of Styrofoam beans (little white balls). (Not a good project to start at dinnertime!)

I went out to the shed to look for my bag of Styrofoam beans. I didn't see it in there and was frustrated. I absolutely had to do this, I had to refill that beanbag chair, now! "Maybe I put the beans in the old car with the old bean bag which was stored in there," I thought. I looked in the car window and didn't see it. I was about to go back and look again in the shed when ‘something’ told me to open the door, and look under the old bean bag chair. When I moved it I saw the kitty on the floorboards, skin and bones, and very sick. I was horrified.

This was no ordinary kitty. It was a Bengal, a cross between an Asian Leopard cat and a domestic breed. It has spots like a leopard, and is the beloved pet of a man who lives about a quarter of a mile away. He had called me ages ago, it seemed, looking for it. He was afraid it had been killed by a nearby dog. I wasn’t sure exactly where in the forest his cabin was and had lost his phone number.

I called my other neighbor and we brought the cat water, and a little bit of canned sardine meat. We both then went on a search for the owner and finally found him. I truly believe it was a stroke of genius, on my Guardian Angel’s part, to manipulate me off the couch and out to that car to find that cat! It would not have lasted much longer.

When I went back into my shed I found the Styrofoam beans right away. What did I learn from this? Well, maybe to be more accepting of ‘mindless missions’. Maybe to be more aware of them after the fact. Is it possible my whole life is a ‘mindless mission’, that I’m stumbling around, not really knowing why I’m here?

Janie Tate

This is the true joy in life - being used for a purpose recognized by yourself as a mighty one;
being thoroughly worn out before you are thrown on the scrap heap;

Table Talk

By Barbara Johnson

Through the good work of Dr. Emoto, Raymon Grace and others, many of us have become familiar with how our thoughts and emotions are imprinted in water, influencing all those who use it. So let's pause to think for a moment, that similarly, our food, too, will be imbued with whatever is going on at a subtle level during its preparation and ingestion.

Fortunate are those of us who are able to grow much of their own vegetables and fruit, enabling them to choose non-toxic farming methods, and serve food fresh from garden to table - all their food imbued with that special feeling of joyous satisfaction, at having been able to produce it themselves. However, the majority of us rely either partly or solely on food from the markets, coming as it does with a 'mixed bag' of influences from the manner of its production, storage and handling.

So, how to negate any unwanted effects, and maximise our absorption of the available nutrition?

Let's make a start with our attitude in the kitchen. Is our approach one of 'just another chore' or can we please begin by noticing with pleasure the various colours, textures and perfumes of the ingredients.

Then let's appreciate our companions along the way, those pots and pans that make our cooking possible. Next we will bear in mind those for whom we prepare the meal, whether just for oneself, or for others, and focus on doing our best to suit their needs and tastes.

Finally, do you remember, in days gone by, what happened as we sat down to the meal, “Yes of course - we said Grace! an Attitude of Gratitude” which served to infuse the food with happy vibes, and incidentally quietened the recipients, giving their digestions a better chance. Only pleasant topics were permitted in table conversation, further enhancing the beneficial effect.

So I would like to present a little meditation for the mealtable:

*“We give thanks for the Divine forces that have produced this food, and to all the hands that have brought it to our table.
May we absorb the nutrients to the highest good of our health and may any unwanted or harmful substances be neutralised and suitably eliminated.”*

Amen

Barbara is a long time member of our Society, she has a wealth of experience in dowsing. This is her first article to this newsletter and we hope she will share more of her experience with us (Ed).

Quotations

*“I expect to pass through life but once.
If therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow being,
let me do it now, and not defer or neglect it,
as I shall not pass this way again.”*

Short Cut Mazes

By Pat Prevost, Reprinted from the Journal of the Canadian Society of Dowzers, Summer 2010

I had a call from a long-time friend and dowser who was looking for the missing car keys to the family's second vehicle. She related that she had dowsed, and the result was that in every room she asks, her dowsing system said they were there. They were not anywhere.

So I asked her to describe her dowsing approach to me; specifically, what questions she was asking and what her dowsing protocol consisted of. I knew her to be a very connected intuitive person, yet it seems that without any preparation or preamble as an opening for her dowsing system, or any identification of the energies involved in this search, she had just simply asked if the keys were "here".

Let's take this "Are they here?" question and relate it to the very literal language of anyone's dowsing system. The meanings of words differ from person to person, and often do not follow any prescribed definition from any dictionary... but then I ask you which dictionary are you using? Scholars disagree on the meaning of words, and so then you are using that word solely according to your own understanding of its meaning.

So now ask once again the question "Are they here?", which upon further consideration seems to fall short of the quest to find the keys. Now let's add to the mix the concept of time and of space. My first piece of advice to my friend was that she pauses to imagine just how many energy trails those keys, to a vehicle that they had owned for many years, would have left in the space they call their home.

Her mental light bulb went on without hesitation. That led to further discussion as to whether she had taken the time to visualize the exact set of keys in her mind, considering that there were several sets of car keys that had been around the house. Had she placed herself and the keys in the present time and space? Had she alerted her dowsing system that she wanted them physically so she could at that moment pick them up, go out, and actually start her car?

'Short Cut Mazes' is what I call the conundrum in which she had found herself when she telephoned me to find out what was going on. In her quest for an instant fix, the dowsing protocol went out the door with the keys! Ultimately that's where her keys were, actually out the door. Her hubby had them in his pocket when he went with his brother, to fix her sister's house plumbing. He had emptied his pockets on the sister's kitchen counter, and there the keys had sat hidden from sight. So no amount of the type of dowsing my friend was doing in the house, would have turned up the keys in question.

There was a presumption that they were in the house, which was a classic misdirection. So did she ask for the higher selves of all who lived there to help with the search? This I personally believe to be another key aspect of dowsing to find things.

There is a reason that we teach beginners to write down their questions and then dowse to see if they are a 'ten out of ten' question. Are they a question that asks one single "Yes" or "No" query, and not a multiple of queries all stacked into one? We teach beginners to properly identify the characters in the situation: environmental factors, individuals involved, motivating factors, time and space, etc.

In the quantum universe of dowsing, we truly need to set our dowsing GPS coordinates accurately for the result that we're looking to achieve. We teach beginners to open the dowsing protocol, to get all in order with everyone's permission to proceed, to administer the questions carefully, to close the dowsing protocol, and to thank all who had participated.

This a short list of some of the things I mean:

1. Asking the dowsers permission questions... “Can I, May I, Should I?”
2. Is it in my best interests to proceed?
3. Is it in their best interests to proceed?
4. Is it the right time to dowse? Would another time be better?
5. Am I in the centered, balanced, aligned, grounded, shape to dowse appropriately at this time?

If not, then, what on this list of exercises or activities (everyone should take the time to prepare a checklist of this sort) can I do to be ready to dowse? Sometimes you simply need to drink some spring water (brains need water to work), to eat some good food (energy drives the metabolism) or to get some fresh air (do some deep breathing) to oxygenate the entire system. Essentially it is whatever you need to do to be in proper shape to dowse.

This phenomenon of good dowsers tripping themselves up with short cut mazes, is one that constantly repeats itself. Often beginning dowsers can find lost things without any effort, because they are carefully going step by step and processing very effectively. It's when we get comfortable and start taking things for granted, that we end up getting lost in the mazes of the short cut world.

Think of it this way. You know those shortcut icons on your desktop, that you click and there you are in the right place in your computer to perform the operating function you need, well, behind them there is a whole mass of programming allowing you to take that short cut to the software you wish to operate. Let's say you somehow delete the underlying programming. Then the short cut icon is a path to nowhere. So when we ignore our study and practice of dowsing protocols, we too find our results are less than to be desired. Dedicated dowsers seek to get into deeper relationships with their dowsing systems, and that seems to be why they get the results.

10 Wise Choices to Skyrocket Your Happiness

By Gail Brenner, Reprinted from the changeblog

“The amount of happiness that you have depends on the amount of freedom you have in your heart.”

~Thich Nhat Hanh ~

Who doesn't want to be happy? Just take a look at any moment of your life, any choice you make. Isn't your intention to be happy?

By happiness, I don't necessarily mean the pollyanna, silly-smile-on-your-face kind. What I mean is a deep sense of contentment, the capability of being peaceful and at ease no matter what, an inner knowing that things are just fine.

Somehow true happiness eludes us, and here's why. Even though we long for it more than anything, we make choices that derail us. We choose stressful behaviors, distorted beliefs through which we view the world, and emotional chaos. And in doing so, we interfere with our potential to be happy.

Happiness is absolutely within your reach. In fact, it's closer than close – the essence of you. How to discover happiness? Make a study of your thoughts and emotions. See what makes you unhappy, then plant your feet firmly in the land of happiness. Make these ten wise choices, and the deepest happiness imaginable will be revealed.

1. Take responsibility.

Don't blame others, turn yourself into a victim, or wait for someone to come and save you. If you want to be happy, take the bull by the horns. Be willing to figure out how you stand in the way of your happiness.

2. Embody enthusiasm.

Be willing, open, courageous, and humble. Admit what isn't working, and be available to the possibility of real inner change. Keep your quest alive.

3. Drop your old baggage.

Nothing kills happiness more quickly than old hurts, resentments, and grudges. If you are spending your precious time stuck in a sad story from the past, realize that you are being affected way more than anyone else. Wrap all of that pain in a vast cocoon of love, then move on with clarity and grace.

4. Become intensely interested in your inner life.

The cause of unhappiness is the playing out of conditioned habits that don't serve you. Find out what they are and use a laser focus to see how they work. With your new-found awareness, make healthy, life-affirming choices.

5. Question your beliefs.

We unknowingly build our lives around distorted beliefs and expectations. Put every thought under the microscope for examination to see if it is actually true. You will undoubtedly find that you are living through a veil of confusion and limitation. Be willing to step away from these familiar and cherished beliefs and see everything with fresh eyes.

6. Appreciate presence.

Happiness is found here, in the eternal now – not in the past or future. Relax. Let all efforting fall away, and receive everything just as it is. Luxuriate in the wonder of your senses as you go about your daily life.

7. Study your emotions.

Life becomes heavy and burdensome when we are ruled by difficult emotions. The medicine for this emotional pain is interest and attention. Stop telling yourself stories that fuel your emotions. Rather, welcome the direct experience of the feelings and the sensations in your body. Let them be without needing to get rid of them. Over time, they will lose their power over you, and you will be at peace. The clouds will lift, revealing the happiness you have been searching for all along.

8. Live from your heart.

Shed every thought, emotion, and habit that no longer serves you. What is left? Love. Let love permeate your conversations, activities, and the way you treat yourself. In any moment, ask, “What would love do?” then do it. Savor the deliciousness of a full and open heart.

9. Choose freedom over fear.

Fear is another happiness-killer. Know when fear is driving your choices, and choose otherwise. Meet fear with love, then have the courage to act on what you really want.

10. Let happiness pervade your life.

Every moment presents the opportunity to be happy. If you doubt me, just take a look at your own experience. When you break it down to its bare essence in the moment, you will realize that a choice is always possible:

Nag or be silent, self-criticize or self-love, sustain stress or take a deep breath, perpetuate a habit or unravel it until you just can't keep it going anymore.

When we are at peace with our own experience, we can't help but be happy. Nothing is in the way. We see through the fog of faulty beliefs and dramatic stories, leaving us available to consciously choose happiness – now, and now, and now. It's right here, can you feel it?

Happiness is no longer a mystery. Make these 10 wise choices, and the endless well of happiness will be revealed to you.

What to Grow Inside Your Home

By John Richardson

Ever been inside a building where the feeling was so nice it defied description? (I have only experienced it once so far, and a few others not quite up to that standard.) It is an experience that will stay with you forever!

We all want our homes to be loving, joyful, happy, etc.,

By using your divining skills, chosen ‘emotion energy’ streams can be found and helped to spread out and grow inside your home. An ‘emotion-energy’ stream is the ‘foundation’ upon which you will build the feeling of that emotion into the building, home, etc.

When living your daily life inside the building, each time you live that emotion, you are adding to the foundation you have provided, and the emotion builds up in strength and value.

Make a list of the ‘emotion-energy’ streams you want to weave into the fabric of your home.

Method:

Inside the house take your L Rods, pendulum, or whatever tool you are comfortable using.

- Go into your divining model, and ask to be shown the first ‘emotion energy’ stream on your list. Example: ‘a happy energy’ stream.
- Walk forward until your L Rods indicate the edge and angle of this ‘happy-energy’ stream.

- Stop.
- Ask for the rods to indicate the other edge of the 'happy energy'. Walk forward slowly until the L Rods indicate. You have now identified a 'happy energy' stream.
- Now, divine for an intersecting 'happy energy' stream. When located, stand on the intersection.
- Go into your divining mode and ask for these 'happy energy' streams you are standing on to spread out and form a carpet in all directions throughout the house.
- Await confirmation.
- Once the energies start to move, you can follow their progress by means of your L Rods.
- If a desired 'emotion energy' stream is not located, introduce it! (You have to start somewhere.)
- Do not worry about creating problems by overlaying the same areas with different 'emotion energies'. They live in harmony and do not interfere with each other.
- Repeat the above steps for each of the 'emotion energy' streams you have listed.

The way you live your daily life will add value to the strands you have now woven into your home. Keep up the good work. In time you too will have a home people L-0-V-E to remember!

Enjoy!

Sensitivity, Science & Spirit

- Dianne Parker -

Can anyone learn to be a Psychic? Can psychic sensitivity assist Dowsing?

Since the beginning of civilization Sensatives, Dowsers, Healers, Psychics & Mediums, have used their gifts for the benefit of mankind. Scientific research has proven this phenomena many times.

Dianne will explore these secrets, to expand the vision & shed new light on these gifts of life. Dowsers recognise that our Spirit, our Higher Selves, & the spirit of nature communicate with us. Mediums recognise communication with Spirit & the oneness of all living. As we have much in common, we will discover how the specialities of Dowsers & Mediums can be complementary.

Dianne Parker is a natural born medium, her mediumship being enhanced & directed through studies undertaken mainly at London's acclaimed Arthur Findlay College. She is an accredited Clairvoyant, Spiritualist Medium, Spiritualist Speaker, Psychic and more...

As a Spiritualist Minister, Dianne runs a Spiritualist Church Service at the Mona Vale Scout Hall & is authorised for weddings, funerals & naming ceremonies. Dianne is available for private consultations.
