Qigong – Improving your quality of life.

Qigong (Chi-Kung) has been used for thousands of years to help improve people's quality of life; it's a part of the holistic system of Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM). The dynamic forms and stillness meditation help regulate the meridian system, releasing stress, increase health and longevity as well as developing spiritual perception and awareness.

Simon Blow had a near fatal accident at the age of nineteen that led Simon to investigate various methods of healing and rejuvenation. A path he has been on for over twenty five years.

He is a Sydney-based master teacher (Laoshi) who has been leading regular classes for beginning and continuing students since 1992. Simon has received training and certification from Traditional Chinese Medical Hospitals and Taoist Monasteries in China, and has been given authority to share these techniques.

He has received World Health Organisation Certification in Medical Qigong clinical practice from the Xiyuan Hospital in Beijing. He has been initiated into Dragon Gate Taoism and given the name of Xin Si, meaning Genuine Wisdom. Simon is a Standing Council Member of the World Academic Society of Medical Qigong in Beijing.

From the President

A dear friend of mine has been giving talks about the life we live today, about the need to expand our conscious-ness, about the necessity of forgiveness, about the central position of love not only in our own lives but in the Universe as a whole. Last year was a chaotic period of time, in terms of world events as well as on a personal level. People have gone through events that are very trying and chaotic. They are still continuing.

We are progressing to 2012 and all of the changes predicted for then are happening as you read this. They will have their fulfillment by 2012 but they are taking place now in an accelerated form.

The energies flowing into the Earth are producing waves of consciousness and opening us up to an increased awareness of our position as spiritual beings.

Not everyone will experience the chaos. The secret is to go forward in our own unique way knowing that we are moving to a higher level of understanding and consciousness. We have to see and understand at a very deep individual level that we are responsible for our own life and what we manifest and call into our life. This represents a new way of being, a new way of thinking, accepting the responsibility of changing matters in our own individual life and then helping others close to us to also change the situations of their life.

Think of our health which is much more than the physical side of things. Well-being is affected by our emotional, mental and spiritual nature as well as the physical. All areas of our life are going through a change. We can move through the chaos and create a new Dawn if we like. We can create a beautiful future. So let's do it. And while we're at it, let's try and see the big picture and help the ones less fortunate than ourselves.

I'm going away for a bit, actually to a family wedding in Scotland, but I shall be back in time for the July meeting.

Do practise your dowsing every day and you will be amazed how your skills will improve. That's what I'll be doing, in between wee drams of delightful single malt whiskies, which in the Gaelic means 'water of life'.

Best wishes

Noel

New Energy

I am always surprised and impressed when people volunteer their time and energy in the spirit of Service, without a thought for a return, but I should not, because it feels really good to help.

This month two members have volunteered to breathe new life and energy into the Society.

Sally Lamont will be our new seminar coordinator. Sally brings a lot of experience to this role and we look forward to a very successful series of high quality Dowsing Seminar this year. Upcoming Seminars are planned for June, August and again later this year.

Gisela Volkland will be our new treasurer, to replace Maxine Simos who has chosen other endeavours, we wish Maxine the best. Gisela has experience in accounting and running her own business, she will also be one of the seminar lecturers in the next seminar.

We would like to welcome Sally & Gisela and congratulate them for their continued commitment to the Society.

Your Cab is Waiting

When I arrived at 2:30 a.m., the building was dark except for a single light in a ground floor window. Under these circumstances, many drivers would just honk once or twice, wait a minute, and then drive away.

But I had seen too many impoverished people who depended on taxis as their only means of transportation. Unless a situation smelled of danger, I always went to the door. This passenger might be someone who needs my assistance, I reasoned to myself.

So I walked to the door and knocked. “Just a minute”, answered a frail, elderly voice. I could hear something being dragged across the floor. After a long pause, the door opened. A small woman in her 90’s stood before me. She was wearing a print dress and a pillbox hat with a veil pinned on it, like somebody out of a 1940s movie.

By her side was a small nylon suitcase. The apartment looked as if no one had lived in it for years. All the furniture was covered with sheets. There were no clocks on the walls, no knickknacks or utensils on the counters. In the corner was a cardboard box filled with photos and glassware.

“Would you carry my bag out to the car?” she said. I took the suitcase to the cab, then returned to assist the woman. She took my arm and we walked slowly toward the curb. She kept thanking me for my kindness. “It’s nothing”, I told her. “I just try to treat my passengers the way I would want my mother treated”.

“Oh, you’re such a good boy”, she said. When we got in the cab, she gave me an address, and then asked, “Could you drive through downtown?” “It’s not the shortest way,” I answered quickly. “Oh, I don’t mind,” she said. “I’m in no hurry. I’m on my way to a hospice”.

I looked in the rear-view mirror. Her eyes were glistening. “I don’t have any family left,” she continued. “The doctor says I don’t have very long.”

I quietly reached over and shut off the meter.

“What route would you like me to take?” I asked. For the next two hours, we drove through the city. She showed me the building where she had once worked as an elevator operator.

We drove through the neighborhood where she and her husband had lived when they were newlyweds. She had me pull up in front of a furniture warehouse that had once been a ballroom where she had gone dancing as a girl.

Sometimes she'd ask me to slow in front of a particular building or corner and would sit staring into the darkness, saying nothing. As the first hint of sun was creasing the horizon, she suddenly said, “I'm tired. Let's go now”.

We drove in silence to the address she had given me. It was a low building, like a small convalescent home, with a driveway that passed under a portico. Two orderlies came out to the cab as soon as we pulled up. They were solicitous and intent, watching her every move. They must have been expecting her.

I opened the trunk and took the small suitcase to the door. The woman was already seated in a wheelchair. “How much do I owe you?” she asked, reaching into her purse. “Nothing,” I said “You have to make a living,” she answered. “There are other passengers,” I responded.

Almost without thinking, I bent and gave her a hug. She held onto me tightly. “You gave an old woman a little moment of joy,” she said. “Thank you.”

I squeezed her hand, and then walked into the dim morning light. Behind me, a door shut. It was the sound of the closing of a life.

I didn't pick up any more passengers that shift. I drove aimlessly lost in thought. For the rest of that day, I could hardly talk. What if that woman had gotten an angry driver, or one who was impatient to end his shift? What if I had refused to take the run, or had honked once, then driven away? On a quick review, I don't think that I have done anything more important in my life.

We're conditioned to think that our lives revolve around great moments.

But great moments often catch us unaware, beautifully wrapped in what others may consider a small one.

People may not remember exactly what you did, or what you said, but, they will always remember how you made them feel.

Life may not be the party we hoped for, but while we are here we might as well dance!

Quote of the day

Always you have been told that work is a curse and labour a misfortune.

But I say to you that when you work you fulfill a part of earth's furthest dream, assigned to you when that dream was born,
and in keeping yourself with labour
you are in truth loving life, and to love life through labour is to be intimate with life's innermost secret.

Do Metal Buildings Cause Depression?

By Ellen Englekemier

A few years ago I read that people who worked in metal buildings often became frustrated, angry, depressed, and had higher than normal accident rates. Only recently, when dowsing for causes and cures of illnesses did I make the connection: those people were suffering from clinical depression. Other common symptoms of depression are difficulty making decisions and what I call an ‘inability to get oneself together’. Often, the inside of these people’s homes or offices will be a cluttered mess. I have heard that many welfare recipients suffer from depression.

That makes a lot of sense now. Here in the Midwest, a large share of welfare recipients dwell in old mobile homes. Anyone living in a house that has steel or aluminum siding is also susceptible. There are millions of people in the U.S. who suffer from depression. My dowsing tells me that seventy percent of these cases are caused by metal-sided buildings. It should also be noted that metal roofing can cause depression, as well.

Apparently there is some yet unidentified beneficial energy that cannot penetrate glass or metal. Lack of that essential energy gradually causes depression. (Note: Vinyl siding does not present a problem to people’s health.)

As dowsers, we can provide a lot to help alleviate this problem. First, the cure. Depression is caused by a lack of an enzyme called “chymotrypsin”. This product is supposed to be in everyone’s body. It can be purchased at health food stores or online without a prescription in the US.

Curing depression with chymotrypsin can be accomplished in 1 to 6 months. Dowse for pills-per-day and number of months. If instructions call for two pills or more per day, the person should take half at breakfast and half at bedtime. The patient should notice a positive improvement on the first or second day.

Of course the depression will return if no changes are made to the offending building. The problem can be eliminated by using the traditional copper wire loop technique. For those unfamiliar, I will quote from Thomas J. Millerin's, 'Noxious (Geopathic) Fields Are Damaging To Your Health' [available from ASD headquarters]

“Use #12 or #14 single insulated or uninsulated wire conductor cable. If a three conductor cable is used, remove insulation six inches back from both ends and twist all three bare wires tight together. Three wire #12 house wiring is preferred.

Staple loop ends close to the gap to make sure wire ends remain facing each other at the gap. When used to clear a house, the wire loop can be placed around the foundation. If placed outside on the ground, the wire should be covered with earth to prevent accidental removal or disturbance. The gap between the wire ends needs to be 12 to 48 inches for metal buildings/siding. This is slightly different than for other noxious fields.”

Of course very few medical doctors will believe that metal buildings can affect us mentally or that an enzyme can cure depression. But we have some medical professionals who are also dowzers, so I am requesting that they check my information and correct me if I am inaccurate.

People's health is simply too important to wait for science to catch up. No one should suffer just because others do not believe.

Human Energy Field & the Earth Pulse

by Wallace G. Heath, Ph.D.

This presentation should not be considered as a scientific research paper. Rather it is intended as an initial exploration of a topic relatively new to the author that may be of interest to the members. Further, it is hoped that some members may wish to explore aspects of the subject on their own with some of the low-cost methods suggested at the end of the paper, or some better ones of their own. It reflects my conviction that it is much more fun to participate than to simply 'spectate'. Science should be recognized as a participation sport. Welcome aboard the Science Corner.

The Earthpulse

The 'earthpulse' was discovered and verified by several authors over the past half century. It is known as the Schumann Frequency (or resonance) after its discoverer (Schumann, 1952) and consists of a magnetic pulse which averages about 7.9 Hertz (cycles per second).

It varies from 1 Hz to 40 Hz depending on several factors: thunderstorms, solar storms, night vs. day, meteorological conditions, other solar radiation, the height of the magnetosphere above the earth, etc.

It is caused by the average 200 lightning strikes per second that bounce around the earth between the surface and the magnetosphere with the speed of light, producing a standing resonant wave with extremely low frequencies.

So why should dowzers be interested? Probably most living animals (and perhaps plants) seem to utilize this energy in a variety of ways. If we are removed from a site with an 8 Hz pulse to one of 2 to 3 Hz, our reaction times can be much reduced, and we can get headaches and depression. If returned to 8 Hz we may become normal again.

Such an effect can be caused by an approaching thunderstorm. Even stronger effects can be caused by invisible solar flares. Not all people have such reactions due to the wide range of sensitivities to electromagnetic fields. I was with a small group of dowzers and none could dowse when the solar flare field reached a K=4 (on a scale of 1 to 9). If there had not been a cell phone call to the Solar Lab, the cause would not have been known.

But what about health and healing? It is known that the pineal gland tunes to the earthpulse. It releases melatonin and maintains our 24-hour cycle. And now it is known that the pineal gland is the master gland of the entire endocrine system.

How could our health not be largely affected by it? It is known that energy workers/healers through meditation with the alpha brain wave (8 Hz) are able to “amp up” this energy to many times that of the brain wave and direct it through their hands as multi-wave oscillations (.2 Hz to 40 Hz), which facilitate many forms of healing (see Zimmerman, 1992; Oschman, 2000; Seto, 1992).

These energy fields can be measured accurately with instruments such as the SQUID (superconducting quantum interference device) which can measure fields less than a billionth of the earth’s field (Becker, 1990).

Reprinted from the American Dowser Quarterly, Vol 45, No.1

I was told that NASA had to artificially create this frequency in the Space Station to insure the astronauts’ physical and mental health. (the editor)

New Seminar for June 6, 2010

Seminars are wonderful ways to learn more about the practical aspects of dowsing. We are committed to an educational role in that respect, so we are announcing our third seminar for this year.

It will be a very practical seminar, presented by 2 very experienced teachers: Gisela Volkland and Maggie Lowe.

The Seminar cost is $120 for members and $140 for non-members. Non-members will have the opportunity to join the Society on the day at a discounted price. A seminar registration form is available on the next page. If you want to attend, pull the registration form out of the newsletter and mail it, with your cheque or money order, to our seminar coordinator, Sally Lamont. Sally's details are on the form on the next page.

When:

The seminar registration will begin at 9:30 am for a 10:00am start, on Sunday June 6th.

Where:

Community Hall, 44 Gladesville Road, Hunters Hill, Sydney, NSW, see back of newsletter for directions.

Who should attend:

Dowsing experience will be an advantage to obtain maximum benefit from the seminar, but if you have a burning passion to learn about 'Dowsing for health' or 'Dowsing for your garden' come anyway and you can attend a beginner's seminar later.

What to bring:

Pendulum (optionally: bobber, or L rods)

An extra bottle of water (small) to make a garden medicine

A small plant that needs help, if you have one

Pen and pad, an open mind and a sense of humour.

What you will learn:

Morning session: Dowsing for Health (Gisela Volkland)

Topics will include:

- Aligning the chakras and sensitizing your perception
- Learn techniques used to find imbalances in the body's energies
- Locate affected areas
- Learn how to bring healing into your system
- Dowse for beneficial foods, supplements and drinks
- Dowse for what to avoid to restore health
- Dowse for your Aura
- Make the workings of your chakras visible and balance them

This is a very interactive workshop and you will find that learning about all these things will be fun!

Gisela will help you develop and refine your dowsing skills. She will be going over some basics, so that the topic will cater for beginners as well as more advanced dowsers.

Afternoon session: Dowsing for your Garden (Maggie Lowe)

Topics will include:

- Plan and create your own special garden
- Turn gardening heartache into hope
- Garden in harmony with the laws of nature
- Choose plants which will thrive whenever you plant them
- Understand the need of plants
- Learn to connect with the spirit of your place

This session offers plenty of opportunity to learn very practical techniques and protocols. Maggie will also make sure any beginners present will benefit and the advanced dowsers will not be disappointed.

The participants will receive Seminar notes and morning and afternoon tea will be provided. There will be pendulums and bobbars for sale.

Cost: $120 members or $140 for non members

About our Seminar presenters:

Gisela Volkland

Has been working in the alternative health industry since 1982. Some of her studies included Herbalism, Homeopathics, Bach Flower Remedies, Dr. Schuessler Cell Salts, Clinical Hypnosis and others. Gisela has run a health clinic in Castle Hill in the past.

Maggie Lowe

Is a practical dowser and teacher, she hosted a very successful beginner's seminar earlier this year. She specialises in gardening where the pendulum guides her every move, and the results speak for themselves, her garden is a testimony of her skills.

Intentionally Aware

by Clif Sanderson

“Without taking consciousness into account we could not have formulated quantum theory in a fully consistent way.” Albert Einstein.

Over many years I have watched the gradual degradation of the word and meaning of the concept of intention. It ought to be praised as one of the most powerful tools we can use to create new patterns of thinking and change in a world of confusion and fear.

Minute by minute the volatile conscious state arises and is modified by our fluctuating intentions towards completing different tasks – from the mundane to the charitable to the spiritual. We intend to have a pleasurable cup of tea, we compassionately intend to help a friend, we mindfully intend to meditate.

Each of these intended events, if accompanied by skillful action, becomes complete and firmly establishes an experience which the mind, relishing habit above all else, concretizes it as a valid reference point for future behaviour. This tendency towards action based on experience often causes us difficulty as long as we remain ignorant of the way it affects our decision making, but it also serves to release us from constantly maintaining attention to mundane, repetitive chores.

For example if we regularly drive our car to work each morning we could be talking to a passenger, listening to the radio and so on without once thinking of how to drive, which route to take etc. because, once formed, the intention to drive to work completes itself without further attention from our conscious mind.

We can say that intention increases as attention decreases.

Once an intention is formed it completes itself, we do not need to keep reminding ourselves, “I am driving my car”, “I am making a cup of coffee”, “I am walking to the post box”. It allows for the completion of the action by neither consciously focusing on the proceeding nor indulging in ego-driven desire to participate in a preconceived outcome.

Thus without struggle, the mind (attention) and the higher consciousness (intention), are brought into harmonic resonance and, as with driving the car, no further action is required to reach completion.

However, as we all well know, the mind tenaciously clings to past experiences as boundaries and requires more than explanations to change those entrenched ways. In order to do this we need to free the mind by association with new patterns. The tribal witchdoctors facilitated this by consciously creating a persona exotic to their patients, thus preventing the inquirer's mind from settling back comfortably into old ideas of useful treatment.

In order to achieve this for ourselves we need to first override the impact of the past patterns and non-beneficial habits of a lifetime which ride along with us comfortably ensconced in our personal chariot, resisting all possibility of a change of direction.

This is what makes accessing the intention hard to do because the 'lazy' mind loves to act as though it is the master in charge. It dislikes even more to take time out for contemplation, meditation or cogitation.

But the paradox is that it is only once you let go of the reins do you become in charge. Why is that? Because deep inside ourselves we know that ultimately we know next to nothing in a universal sense. The more we hold on tight, the further away we are from freedom of action and choice.

This is why I believe the practice and continual studying of dowsing is so important.

Clearly it loosens the nervous grip of attention seeking, allowing intention to form unclothed by desire for a specific outcome and opens a quiet space inviting superior wisdom to prevail.

The Killing Fields (EMF)

By Francois Capmeil, with material provided by Norman Dodge

Probably no individual has collected more information about Electro Magnetic Fields (EMF), or done more to sound the alarm about the dangers they pose, than Louis Slesin, editor of a newsletter called Microwave News (<http://www.microwavenews.com>). Here is his ranking of the worst hazards, and some advices.

High-tension electric transmission lines. Strung along high towers, these lines carry a large amount of electricity over long distances. Homes, schools and playgrounds should not be built anywhere near them.

Electric distribution lines. They carry current down local streets, they generate less powerful fields than those of transmission lines, but distribution wires are much closer to most homes. Some of these carry single phase current, while others carry 3 phase current which generate higher EMF.

Electric blankets. They lie beside the body for hours at a time, bathing the body in dangerous EMF. It is a better idea to use them to warm the bed, and then unplug the blanket before going to bed. Turning them off is not enough, they must be unplugged from the wall. Or better still to get a quilt instead.

Video-display terminals. People spend whole work days close to computer screens. Flat screens are safer in general than old style CRT monitors.

Other appliances. Electric clocks and fans usually run continuously. They should be kept at least 75 cm from the head.

Other appliances. Shavers, hair dryers, can openers and microwave ovens all generate powerful fields, and people should be careful to use them for short periods of time.

All these lines do generate a field which is far wider than the wires that carry the electricity to your home. For the power lines and the transmission lines, there is not much you can do. But for your home, Norman has come up with a way to minimise the field which, like an aura, runs along the electrical circuit in your house and appliances.

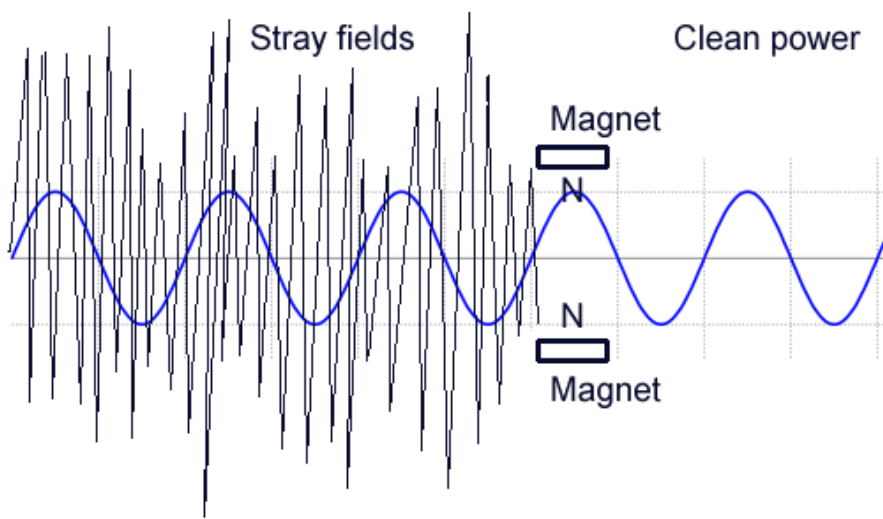

Along the way, the electricity picks up a lot of other mostly unwanted signals. For example, the power companies want to retain a roughly constant load to keep the frequency at 50Hz, so during the night, when all the factories are closed, they encourage you to use electricity to heat your hot water (off peak heating). To do this, they place special pulses on the electricity which tell the off peak meter to turn on and off automatically. Stray microwave beams, radio frequencies, radar pulses, earth radiations, all contribute to the unwanted signal load on your electricity.

Some of these unwanted signals have enough power to drive your meter, and are registered as power that you consume from the power company. Of course they show up on your bill as well.

Norman has come up with a way to filter this unwanted field, or electric pollution, using a dipole condenser. You will have seen these on some computer power cords. You probably cannot purchase a 'Dipole Condenser', but I will explain how to build one, very inexpensively.

Before I explain how to build the Dipole Condenser, I have to explain about polarity, since we will have to use magnets in our design.

Polarity is a funny thing, because it is all a matter of convention. Some people call the north pole of a magnet 'North', others call it 'South', it is all a matter of where you have been educated. To make things easy I will give you two ways to ascertain the polarity of a magnet. (If you are a dowser, or if you want to learn something new, select the second one).

First we will not talk about North and South poles, but rather 'North Facing' and 'South facing' poles, otherwise it can become very confusing, since it is the South Pole of a magnet which points to the North.

How to find the North Facing side of a magnet:

- Method -1: Take a magnet, a thin cotton string, and a small piece of sticky tape. Tape the cotton string to the magnet. When you suspend it, the magnet will orient itself according to the North-South axis. Write an S on the side facing the south.

- Method -2: You will need to find the 'Polarity point' of your pendulum string. To do this, hold your pendulum over the Positive terminal of an AA battery with the string held very, very short. Let it swing back and forth gently while very slowly letting go of a small length of string at a time. You will reach a particular length of string when the pendulum will start to spin. This is the polarity point of your pendulum.

Now hold your pendulum over the Negative terminal, it will spin in the opposite direction. Now find which side of the magnet makes your pendulum spin that way. This will be the South Facing side of the magnet. Write an S over that side of the magnet (The south facing side).

By the way, if you hold your pendulum string at the polarity point, you will find it harder to get answers to mental questions, since it is responding mostly to polarities present around you. This is part of scientific dowsing as discovered by Turennes, Christopher Hills and others like them.

Back to our design: once you have 2 magnets, each with their South facing side labeled 'S', you are ready to proceed.

Find a convenient place where the plastic coated wires coming into your electrical box are accessible and where you will not be exposed to bare wires. Bare electrical wires are dangerous and should never be touched with bare hands. Here we want to find wires that are still inside their protective insulation.

Place a magnet of each side of the wire, so that the sides marked with an S are showing (the un-marked side against the wire). Hold each magnet with gaffer tape or strong electrical tape, making sure the magnets do not move. Remember that they will try to repel each other, since we are placing two 'North Facing' poles face to face over the wire.

You can use Neodymium magnets, which are very powerful, the more powerful the better. Neodymium magnets are so strong that they come packaged with plastic separators. If you remove the separators, the magnets hold so strongly to each other that you may not be able to separate them by hand.

If you do not feel confident to safely perform this technical task, ask a qualified electrician to do it for you.

 Do not attempt this if you are not fully confident to be safe.

Norman has designed a system for car fuel lines, based on the same concept. In this design, the special magnet configuration polarises the carbon in the fuel which results in two explosions rather than one. The first explosion, due to the spark from the spark plug, the other due to the fusion reaction of the electrons created by the polarised fuel (as I am told). I believe Norman is still working to perfect the design.

You can contact Norman on 0415-461-133.

Another interesting fuel conditioning device comes from a gentleman called Albino Gola, from the New Zealand Society of Dowsing and Radionics Inc. We may review this design in a later edition of the newsletter if there is any interest.

Review: Speaker for April

Suzanne Nasby

Our speaker for April was a friendly, down to earth sort of lady, who labels herself a 'shamanic witch'. She uses this term rather than using the word 'shaman', even though both terms have connotations in today's popular culture. The word 'shaman' is actually a Russian derivation meaning religious priest.

Suzanne is also a spiritual teacher, a psychotherapist and a graphic web designer all rolled into one person. She also has a psychotherapist background, so she offers therapy, as well as spiritual teachings, ceremonial roles, workshops and retreats. Ritual and ceremony, she feels, are primarily healing practices. The practice of shamanism is a way of life to her, and she incorporates it into all areas of her life, reflecting a love and respect for nature and all of life.

The term 'neo-shamanism' describes this striving to integrate modern living, while trying to steer away from modern materialistic trends, and 'tread lightly on the earth'. Suzanne integrates the resonance of Australian Aboriginals, in showing respect to the native peoples and the land.

Totem animals were discussed, often bringers of information, and there were books to peruse on this subject, along with some interesting artifacts. Dowsers will be familiar with the idea that animals and indeed plants and water respond favourably to good thoughts and intent.

We then did a guided meditation with the aid of one of her drums, and this was very pleasant, and I'm sure insightful for some.

Suzanne holds workshops and the subjects of her workshops are diverse, from witchcraft and shamanism to ecstatic dance and divine singing.

Micheal English - Trance Channelling

Micheal has over 17 years experience as a trance channel and medium, serving and helped by John of Light. Providing access to information in Records of Light and Akashic Records regarding past, future and near present events, including earth changes, past and future lives, healing and much more.

He is offering himself as an independent spiritual teacher and channel for healing, as a clear channel for communications from and between various entities of love, light and us.

Micheal is often unaware of the information being channelled through his body until after he has watched and listened to the recordings of the entities. He is able to see, sense and interact with many forms of extra-terrestrials and other spirits, some helpful, some not.

The light within you needs a moment to recognise its sacredness

The love within you fuels this light
