The Spiritual Immune & Defence System

- Greg Simmons -

We are on the verge of truly uncovering the amazing capacity of unconditional love, in all of its creative individualistic formats to transform imbalance; of course the reverse is provable too, when we see distortion and lack of symmetry with traumatic emotional input.

Most of Greg's work is based on identifying and releasing the emotions around conflict/shock imprints, and their emotional attachment. Then seeking out the patterning beliefs/feelings that are taken on in early childhood 0 to 6 years.

As we close the current creation cycle in this, 2012, my understanding of the new paradigm is to perceive with your spirit eyes, releasing old judgemental, control influences in conscious/subconscious.

Greg will talk about the following subjects:

Earthbounds - assistance to the light.

Entity removal - whether possession or in house.

Clearing of negative emotional influences in rooms or homes.

Resolving issues with past-over loved ones.

He says: "I feel one of my most important understandings that I have practically discovered in my work, is our perceived relationship with self, which dictates our relationship to all else."

Spring is coming to the East Coast of Australia. We can see the new leaves on the trees, and the flowers in the gardens are blooming. Invisible yet to us, there is another spring happening which is harder to see. It is just as real as the outside one, and is not limited to the East or West coast of any country, as a matter of fact, it is affecting the entire planet and the human race with it.

Our world is made of 4 dimensions, 3 dimensions of space and one of time. We are familiar with this, as it defines our freedom of movement, or lack of, as we can only move forward in the dimension of time.

As most of us are aware there are predictions for 2012 and changes are dubbed to happen, we just do not quite know what will change, but we sense that changes are afoot. I want to share with you something I see happening, not just in my mind or in my imagination, but something I actively participate in.

A new dimension is slowly being laid over our 4 dimensions. The merging is slow but is in progress. This dimension does not have a name, I will call it 'The Heart' because its attribute is feeling. What happens when we emerge into that dimension of the heart, the organ of feeling, awakens and we start to feel.

No, we do not disappear from the physical world when we do, it just adds a new dimension to our perception, so the physical stops being the only avenue for us to get satisfaction from.

This new dimension is bringing 'Humanity' back into people. Not every one awakens at the same time and to the same degree, but slowly and surely the door to that dimension is opening wider. It has been slow to transpire, but now the clues are getting more obvious. Even the mainstream media is helping here, because the sight of suffering, however caused, projected visually and audibly into your homes does lead to a rise in compassion.

Before the times of radio, television, and easy travel, it was very difficult to share or publish the stark facts of human suffering to a world where people lived, as it were, cocooned and isolated in their own small communities.

This rising awareness, over the last one hundred and fifty years or so, has brought the energy of enormous loving intent to bear on these issues. Sometimes it has been misguided, but for the most part great strides have been made in arousing people to join together in groups, to provide assistance and constructive ideas to help those most in need.

This desire and fierce intent to help the less fortunate has been growing exponentially in the last few decades, and has now become self-sustaining.

A planetary shift has taken place and the wish and the intent to relieve suffering wherever it occurs has become normal. Many have difficulty in understanding that this is a new way of thought and behaviour due to our entry into this new dimension.

Will the world end on December 21st, 2012?

No, but the world will change, because it is changing now. The seeds are being planted, A new energy is watering them, a new dimension is shining on them, and I see already the young shoots coming up. You will not see this on the daily news yet, but it will come.

If you understand the big picture, you can connect the dots yourself and make sense of it, so that for you the changes will not be frightening, but a part of the growing process of Humanity.

We have some nice articles this month with some good advice for everyday life on pages 10 and 15. Some members share their experiences on pages 9 and 13 and some animal stories from Bill Northern on page 17.

Until next time.

Fall Equinox 2012*

Have you noticed the exponential increase in heart energy and openhearted people all around you? I sure have! The one thing that struck me the most about my travels in Turkey in April, was how many loving, caring openhearted people we encountered from all over the world.

Their openness made it easy for us to connect in deep and meaningful ways. We came away from numerous encounters with local residents and other travellers feeling enriched by the heartfelt exchanges. When I made a comment of that nature to a Turkish rug seller, he replied, “Yes, I can always recognize the special ones these days, and there are more and more all the time.”

My heart expanded with each of these exchanges and in reflecting on that, I see the workings of yet another amazing evolutionary tool. When we open our hearts and allow divine unconditional Love to flow through directly from Source, without being filtered through the discernment process of our minds, we become a powerful conduit for this Love. When we encounter others, this Love goes before us and touches hearts, and if ready, the heart opens to this Love and expands its capacity. As this Love spreads, more and more are being touched and more and more are ready to open.

A major aspect of this phase of earth’s evolution is about the return to the dominance of the heart as opposed to the mind. The increase in open hearts is accelerating the process of the expansion of Love on its journey to regain sovereignty. Feeling and sharing Love through our open hearts is most certainly a very effective tool that Earth is using to fuel her progress. I can feel when I approach any situation or encounter from an openhearted, open-minded place with Love being expressed, the results are always positive and uplifting. The power of Love truly does go before me and penetrates and lifts all the energies that are shared. I emphasize that any situation, even the most mundane, can be lifted to a heart-warming exchange when we are in that heart space.

I often refer to the various energetic grids that connect us to each other, our beloved planet and the adapted input that fuels evolution. The grids are the delivery system that receives and distributes what we contribute. I can clearly see how this increase in Love is helping to permeate the denser layers of consciousness as it moves through the gridwork with its unstoppable force. This results in that exponential increase I referred to earlier that is touching and opening more and more hearts.

I am seeing signs of this infiltration in advertising also. The big advertising agencies keep their fingers on the pulse of what is motivating all of us potential consumers to guide them. They base their campaigns on current trends, so once in a while I will watch some television just to check out the ads to see what is being picked up on.

I have observed a huge increase in ads attempting to reach hearts with sentimental messages or campaigns that feature concepts like love going into products that are being sold, or that the products are earth friendly, etc. And the reverse of that is a decrease in attempts to appeal to the ego by touting the glory of consumerism.

I find it telling and encouraging to take note of that trend. Beyond the increase of Love and the lifting of consciousness, there is also a physical aspect of Earth's evolution that is happening simultaneously. There has been an equal increase in signs of upheaval that is required to release binding attachments to the mechanisms that held Earth firmly in its previous cycle.

As Earth breaks free of her current shackles, she is preparing to proceed through a portal that will move her into the new cycle ahead of us.

This has been described to me as being similar to going through a birth canal that will strip away the denser layers of consciousness and deliver a newly adapted earth that can thrive in the conditions of the new cycle. (If you are interested in more information about the physics of this transition, I highly recommend checking out the work of Nassim Haramein.)

I see the transit through this portal as the 'big event' that is referred to by many prognosticators, but I do not get a specific time. It has been explained to me that it will begin when the pieces of the puzzle come together to trigger the launch. But, I will say that there are signs of that happening, and one of the biggest is this increase in heart energy. When we feel Loved, we are able to face any circumstance, trusting that we have the resources to deal with it.

Our open hearts and minds will help us embrace this ultimately very positive change and guide us to find ways to survive and even thrive through the process. Look through eyes of Love and you will see it everywhere!

Sharing a Blessing

Every month the Society's Committee meets to discuss matters at hand and manage the affairs of the Society. The first item on the agenda each month is called 'A short Meditation'.

This is an important step to ensure that the meetings are guided by loving energies and for the good of all involved.

One particular time Marilyn Smith lead the meditation. She kindly wrote it for this month's newsletter, so here it is, feel free to use it, and adapt it for your needs.

Meditation can be used to great benefit. It can be used by a group for guidance, as in this case, or as a personal tool. It holds the key to becoming more conscious.

Used as a personal tool, at the beginning or end of the day, it can act as a 'reset' button, so that one does not carry the burden of one day into the next, and allow each day to be started with a fresh perspective.

Slowly breathe in through your nose and out through your mouth....

Feel yourself letting go and sinking down into your chair.....

Put your attention in the centre of your chest, around your heart area.....

Imagine a green ball of light in your heart centre.....

As you breathe in, imagine this green light growing larger and brighter.....

Keep breathing into your heart centre, feeding this green light with your in-breath..... Watching it grow larger and larger, brighter and brighter.....

Now imagine this green healing light flowing down your arms, then into your legs, and into the base of your spine.... flowing up your spine into your neck..... the back of your head.... your scalp..... your face..... throat..... chest.... solar plexus..... and flowing throughout your entire body.....

As you breathe energy is moving through you..... energy moving out of you..... You are receiving..... and giving.....

Now silently ask the higher energies, the divine to bless this society, and embrace this committee with love and guidance.

Pause a while.....

Still focusing on your heart, feel this divine energy radiating out from your heart.....

Let it embrace all the members of this committee.....

Let it fill this hall with divine healing energy..... for the benefit of all.....

Thank you...

Dowsing For Everyday Life Problems

by Jim Waugh, Reprinted from The American Society of Dowsers Quarterly, Summer 1988

This month, October 1987, I had the opportunity to put to practical use some of the skills I learned at this year's annual ASD convention in Danville, Vermont. Of the many important themes presented in the convention's school and seminars, three stand out in my mind as being particularly significant.

First, the likelihood of success in any dowsing search is dramatically increased by the presence of a real need. Second, the accuracy of dowsed information is critically dependent upon a correct phrasing of the search question, and lastly, dowsing is a tool for people to use in the resolution of problems encountered in everyday life.

After my return to my home in East Thetford, Vermont, the first severe autumn rainstorm confronted me with an unwelcome revelation my roof had sprung a leak. The bathroom ceiling was developing a discolored area that was cold and very damp to the touch.

Peering into my attic, I saw a steady drip, drip, drip of water falling from the underside of the plywood panels which comprise the house's sub roof. I stacked piles of dry rags in the attic beneath the leaks and waited for the storm to end.

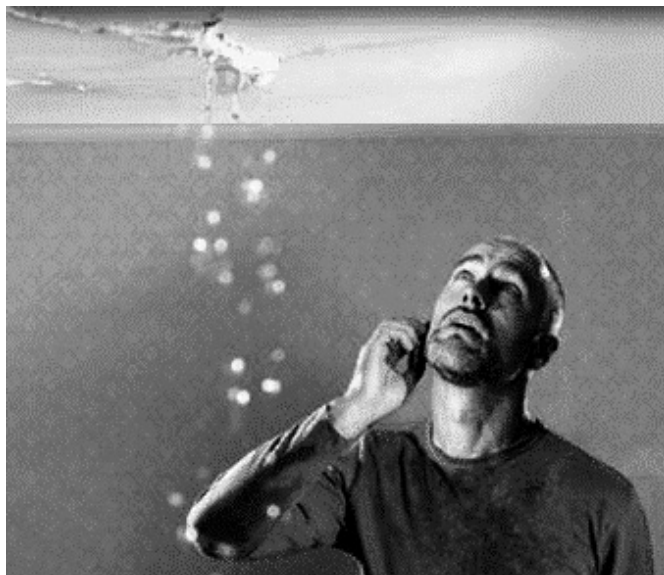

The next day brought sunshine, and me on the roof applying what I believed was an effective repair where I thought the leak ought to be. I tested my workmanship using spray from my garden hose. The result? No change: water was seeping into the attic. And the radio was announcing the approach of autumn's second storm.

What to do? Well, this was "a problem encountered in everyday life," so how about trying out my newly honed dowsing skills? I thought long and hard about the questions I needed answered and their correct phrasing before commencing the dowsing search. And if 'a real need' would enhance the search's success, well, my need was dramatically urgent.

Since I had already tried once by guess and failed at fixing the roof, I realized I needed to know exactly where the water was seeping under the shingles and getting into the house. Based upon observation in the attic on the underside of the roof, I thought the side of the roof north of the brick chimney might be a good place to begin.

The dowsing itself occurred in the basement. Since the north face of the chimney is obstructed by the furnace, I stood facing the east face. Standing there, I mentally projected myself to the rooftop along the north side of the chimney. To achieve this, I concentrated and repeated aloud several times, “I am now on the roof facing the north side of the chimney: my dowsing search will be conducted from this orientation. The corner of the chimney before me and to my left will represent the north east corner of the chimney and the corner before me and to my right will represent the northwest corner of the chimney.”

I held my Y rod in a search position and asked aloud several times, “Please indicate to me the location of the leaks in my roof by showing where perpendicular lines from each leak would intersect the north face of the chimney.”

I thereupon moved the Y rod along the east face of the chimney in a south-to north direction (representing the north face in an east to-west direction). A few inches along, the rod dipped; the end of the rod was close to the chimney surface and it bumped into it. Using a tape measure I determined the distance from the corner where I had started to where the Y rod hit, and recorded it on a piece of paper.

Then I repeated my question and continued moving the rod along the chimney wall. The rod dipped two more times before I came to the other corner of the chimney. To check myself I performed the whole process again, but this time moving in the opposite direction. The rod, much to my relief, indicated the same three locations. Next I asked if there were other locations of leaks on the north side of the roof to the east or west of the chimney. “No.”

Next, I needed to know how far away from the chimney the leaks were located. With the Y rod at ready I asked, “Measured in inches, how far away from the chimney is the furthest leak?” As I counted “1 ... 2 ... 3”, the rod dipped between 2 and 3. I then knew that the leaks were real close to the structure and thus were in the fabric of the seal around the roof opening through which the chimney passed. On my roof that seal consists of black roof cement neatly smeared around the roof to chimney juncture.

I knew at that point the number of leaks, their location, and the material to use for affecting a repair. As a final dowsing question, I asked, “If I patch the roof as recommended, will it continue to leak?” “No.” So I patched the roof as directed by my dowsing. Just in time too, as the storm arrived the day after the repairs were completed. When the rain and slushy snow had fallen for several hours, I nervously climbed into the attic. It was dry! No drip, drip. And it remained dry. What a relief!

So, I have been twice rewarded as a result of my first attendance at an ASD convention. It was great fun participating in the dowsing school and attending the many interesting seminars, and I saved the cost of a roof job. When I compare the price for my member enrolment in both the school and the convention, against the expense of a professional roof repair, I chortle all the way to the bank.

Our Mind – Location, Location, Location!

Have you ever decided to revisit a book that you have read previously only to find it now reads differently to what you remembered from your first reading? Much humour and banter about age and our failing memories flowed as my friends and I discussed the situation, which they also experienced.

A theory was advanced that since our earlier readings we had grown in consciousness and spirituality and now view things from a different perspective and relationship. The book had remained the same, the only thing different now was us, as we now live ‘within a different world’ to where we lived before.

I have read about ‘worlds within worlds’, life existing simultaneously on different dimensions and a person being in different locations at the same time. Let me tell you some of my experiences - ‘Time in all its different forms’ is a most fascinating thing!

At our former home I distinctly remember walking between our beds and studying a painting hanging on the wall. Some two months later my wife was lying in one of the beds when she became aware of the reflection of my back in the mirrors on the bedroom’s wardrobe doors - I was studying the painting mentioned earlier.

She watched the reflection for a matter of minutes before it disappeared. She also realized that at the time of this occurrence she could hear me working in a different section of the house.

During healing we are not bound by the physical laws of this reality. Often when I am involved in healing to a friend’s family (living hundreds of kilometres away) I find myself there, about 100 metres above the ground, looking down on their property.

I project healing energy down onto the home area whilst in that position and then find myself back home. During this time I am not subject to any feeling of propulsion or attraction forces exerted on my body or wind movement caused by motion - I am just in that position without any feeling of physical suspension.

On other occasions, from my home I may be giving healing to some person in a remote part of Australia. While I am doing the healing, I am running energy on a body form which appears in front of me.

The body form will change to any position or angle I require for easy working. You feel the solidity of the body under your hands as you run the healing energy. The healings are effective.

In my quieter times I wonder, “Where am I during these times of healing in places remote from my location? Am I with them or are they with me? Or are we both in ‘healing’ or ‘mind space’? or are both of these the same space?”

I do not know if the body that I use for healing is the person’s body, or their energy body or a surrogate energy body form, but it certainly is of great assistance.

I hear you say, “Who cares, so long as it works!”

Why do I wonder? If I understand more I will be able to help more.

When you are in a different dimension you can bring about change. A place of real magic, full of wonder and delight! Think of the endless good you could achieve!

Until next time, enjoy!

Dowsing For Merchandise

Judy Shane, PhD

The Quester Summer 2001 The Canadian Society of Dowsers

After visiting my friend's spanking new condo, I felt that my bathrooms needed upgrading! However when I studied them, I realized that only the faucets were outdated. They were a badly discoloured brass that just wouldn't shine up.

So off I went to Home Depot to buy new faucets. My towel racks and vanity door knobs were brass so I wanted the faucets to match. The existing vanity holes were eight inches apart, which made suitable faucets pricy; they sold for $400.00 a set, including tax, and I needed two sets.

I went back home, took out the phone book and consulted my pendulum. Being a newcomer to Vancouver, I didn't know who sold plumbing fixtures, so I looked it up in the Yellow Pages.

I asked my pendulum if it could tell me where to find less costly faucets. It responded, “yes”.

So I pointed to the first company listed in the book and it said, “no”. I pointed to the second one, and again it said “no”. I pointed to the third one; “no” again. It kept on saying no until I pointed to Hillcrest Plumbing, where it said “yes”. I asked if I needed to check out any more places and it said “no”.

The next day I drove to Hillcrest Plumbing. They had a very large stock of faucets. I found one I liked and the salesperson said I could have it for $150.00 because the plug was missing. I took it because I had recently replaced my old plug. Shortly after, I found another set that had originally been listed for $600.00 but that I could buy for $200.00 because it was a discontinued sample!

I had gotten two sets for less than the price of one!

While I was browsing the salesperson pointed out to me a plumber who would install the faucets. He was working on a sink and had his back to me. I approached him from behind, and silently asked my pendulum if I should let him install the faucet. My pendulum replied “no”, so I walked away and asked if there were other plumbers available.

I was told that there were three others, so I had the salesperson write their names on a piece of paper. I then dowsed them and the pendulum chose the second name. Then I asked how much it would cost to install them, and was told it would be two hours labour.

As I was signing a work order, the plumber who had been working on the sink came over, looked at the work order and said that the work would take three hours. He was a sour faced man, and I knew instantly why my Angel had rejected him. I signed the contract, stipulating that they send the plumber that I had chosen.

My Angel later assured me that the work would only take two hours. As I expected, two hours was exactly how long it took the plumber that the Angel had chosen.

(P.S. I always use my pendulum for shopping advice, and I always get bargains!)

Using Animal Communication For Physical Healing

Introductory Observations, By Bill Northern Reprinted from the Journal of the Ozark Research Institute Volume 10 No 3

Bill Northern (bill@billnorthern.com) of Warsaw, Virginia, listens to animals from around the world. His work has been featured in publications and on television.

Were there ever a time when a genie told me I could have any one wish come true, and it was to be a wish that would benefit all of human-kind, this work would be my wish. There is nothing that I can think of that would be more satisfying than what we now do, everyday. Only a few years ago, this gift was unimaginable to me and most other people in the world. Now, it is becoming accepted everywhere that people can actually communicate with animals, and be very accurate in doing so.

Most of the animals we (I and my Angels) work with are almost at “the end of the line”. They are either performance animals, mostly horses, that are almost at the ends of their useful lives for their owners; or, perhaps, animals that are sick in ways which the medical people have not been able to sort out.

We have contact with at least forty veterinarians around the world who refer clients to us when these veterinarians are not able to find out what is wrong with a particular animal, or to come up with the treatment that works for that animal. My angels are good at finding the problem and helping people come up with the best way of treating it. We have taught some veterinarians to do this, and I am very proud of their accomplishments since this work often goes against their medical training.

Many of the animals that come to us have behavior problems as well as health problems. We like to be told of the behavior problems at the beginning of a session so that they can be properly negotiated into our time frame, in order that clients not incur any extra time charges. Surprisingly, even to me, we are able to work out most of the problems to the satisfaction of both parties. If the human is willing to give a bit, the animal will almost always do the same.

Cats are the most difficult for me to work with because they do not like to negotiate. They much prefer to just have their own way and will sometimes leave home if you do not let them have their way. Animals will usually try very hard to keep their end of the bargain and will be very forgiving of you if you fail once in a while. (Except for cats)

My Angels can and sometimes will do a bit of healing, especially if the person says he or she cannot afford to spend any more money on the animal. However, I have found that most lameness we find in horses comes from overwork, and if our Angels fix it, the trainer will continue the hard work. If we leave it alone, the trainer will have to spell the animal for a while, or do some healing work him/herself.

Sometimes people hire us to simply see how this works. Many will analyze the session, and then tell others that we were right about this and that, but were wrong about a few places where we said the horse hurt. Believe me, my Angels seldom miss, and if a client doesn't plan to work on all of the places where the animal said it was sore, the client has probably wasted her/his money.

Remember, too, that we are only hearing one side of the story. We are not doing the job of a judge, so we do not usually listen to the client's side of the story. How many times do you wake up in the morning and realize something hurts that did not hurt yesterday, or hurt yesterday that does not hurt today?

Well, animals are the same, and not everything that hurts, now, is going to hurt tomorrow. Just remember that it doesn't take long to apply something like aloe vera gel to the sore places and to ask your Angels to fix the problem. Also, a good body paint is often useful.

Emotional issues are difficult for us to deal with, so we prefer that you use another communicator for this type of problem. Often, animals will try to relieve their owners of problems by taking these on themselves. Often, animals seem to take on some pretty serious diseases in order to protect their owners.

An animal's problems can be caused by the owner not getting along with someone in the owner's family or with someone at work, as well as by many other issues. So, the animals will tell me where they hurt, but I usually do not try to listen to their emotional problems.

We take our work very seriously, because most of the animals we work with are in some serious physical pain, and are sometimes on the ground and cannot get up. We are often the last resort for them. Our work is very mentally and emotionally draining. We can only work with one or two animals a day, remotely, and about six a day, in person. I do not mean we are limited to the above, but if we exceed these limits, we really pay for it the next day.

Some days we seemingly are not able to connect, at all. Working remotely is similar to using the old A.M. radios, which often had a lot of static so that you had to very carefully tune in your station. If we are not very careful, we can tune into the wrong animal. This is why a photo is a big help in assuring we are working on the right subject.

Although this has become a business with us, we are very blessed and do not depend on income from this work to pay our bills. We hope to make a small profit at the end of each year ... at least this is our goal.

The Urge to Purge

by Christan Hummel

Reprinted from The American Society of Dowsers. Spring 2011

Cleanliness is next to godliness. We've all heard these words, especially when our mothers were trying to get us to clean our rooms. But surely that doesn't mean to suggest that a clean kitchen counter or bedroom makes one more holy? Or does it?

Could this dictum have been referring to an inner cleaning? Is there a spiritual dimension to clearing the excess baggage in our space, whether it be the inner space of our consciousness, our thoughts, emotions, and old habits, or the outer space of our environments?

In fact, the two are intimately connected. The thoughts we think do not disappear after we have finished thinking them. According to the occult literature of C.W. Leadbeater, Annie Besant, Madame Blavatsky, Alice Bailey, and others of the Theosophical lineage, every thought we think creates a form on the mental plane.

If nothing is done to them, these forms stay in our auras, conditioning our reactions to events, and creating a filter through which we see and interpret 'reality.' I say 'reality' because quantum physics has acknowledged that there is not One Empirical Reality that we are all perceiving universally, but instead that 'reality' is continually morphing to the perceptions of the observer. WOW!

So if we are carrying around old thoughts of "Mommie didn't love me" or "Daddy can't be trusted." or "Life is a struggle" or whatever emotional baggage is still stuffed away in the inner closets of our consciousness, then the ‘reality’ we perceive is filtered through this lens, and we experience a self fulfilling prophecy: abandonment, lack of support, not feeling loved or valued for our worth. On and on the story of our internal creation goes, as it projects out upon the movie screen of our lives.

So, cleanliness is next to godliness. Can it be that we are gods in human form; and that to know that as our ‘reality’, we must first clean the lens of our internal cameras which are picturing the individual realities we experience? Would we then see the godliness of others and the world around us as well?

It is said that when an aspiration begins to reach the worldly existence of mundane life food, survival, procreation, and fulfilling our desired nature it initiates a response from our own soul, the first connection each of us has to the Godhead. Once that response is activated, a downpour of spiritual light descends into our personality vehicles and our outer lives as the soul goes to work purifying the lower vessel to make it ready to receive the downpour of higher vibrations.

Is it possible that this process works in reverse as well? That as we clear our own internal and external temple spaces, we ready them for the influx of the divine light, allowing it to flow within us more readily?

If it is true that this happens in our own lives, then would it not also apply to our home environments as well? According to Denise Linn, author of Creating Sacred Space: “Not only can your home help to strengthen and heal you, but your home can be a template of harmony within which you and all who enter can be invited to step up to a higher level of spiritual frequency.”

As we clear the physical clutter of our homes, do we open the space for more light and life energy to flow into our lives and dwellings? Feng shui experts would say yes, as would many a professional organizer; but what about the occultist? Is there a basis for making these kinds of connections?

Thinking about the concept of thought forms, according to clairvoyants, dowsers, and psychics who are attuned to such things, thought forms are said to also linger in our environments not just for a few days, months, or years, but indefinitely until they are destroyed or transmuted by a higher frequency!! WOW, again! So does that mean that if my apartment complex is on the site of an ancient Indian burial ground or massacre, that my environment is swimming in the astral soup of that earlier experience? In a word: Yep!

Hence the need for clearing ceremonies which are found round the world from the Catholic Church to the Maori in New Zealand.

Every culture has one, regardless of their different forms, and they are all addressing the same problem: the ancient thoughts and vibrations left over from the past which are still imprinted in our current space. So, what kind of “cleaners” do we use for such situations? Spiritual Ajax? Etheric scrubbing bubbles?

The methods and techniques are varied and diverse, but all have intention as a common theme. Whether you use lemongrass oil, or chant a mantra, or do a sacred dance, if the intention is to use the higher vibrations to transmute and transform the energies from the past, then the objective is met with one very important ingredient needed first: we must first be that higher vibration we choose to imprint into our space. The transformational power doesn't lie in the stick of incense or the rattle or drum or the labyrinth.

These are the tools and vehicles through which we channel our higher vibrations and intentions into our space. So we must first be in touch with our own soul essence, the spark of divinity which exists in each and every living thing; and from that point we project a part of that divine essence into our space. This is the transforming element.

If, then, it is true that this process which works for our own auras also works for our homes, then would it not follow that it is possible to clear the planetary miasmas and collective pain of humanity which is still lodged in the gridlines and sacred points of the earth? As above, so below is the basic Hermetic law that affirms the holographic nature of the universe: what works at the level of the microcosm also works for the macrocosm. In fact, for the last 13 years, I've been privileged to be part of a grassroots network around the world which has been applying these principles to strategic areas of the earth to clear them of their past imprints of violence, abuse, and destruction.

The result has been an influx of light and life into these sacred points and the network of light that surrounds the planet. In the communities where this work has been done, the 'cleaning' that ensues has taken the form of decreased incidence or severity of pollution, crime, and earthquakes, and even balancing of distortions in the weather! Is it possible that global warming has as much to do with our carbon footprint as with our etheric one? Could it be that the 'earth changes' predicted can be mitigated as we clear our earth of the karmic imprints of the past?

My experience with this suggests that we do have a co-creative role in what transpires on this planet as she, a living, conscious being, readies herself for the descent of the higher vibrations entering into her body. To do so, she too is clearing the debris, sometimes through the 'earth changes' we are witnessing. However, if assisted through our co-creative efforts first, then a more gentle transition becomes possible.

I would invite you to take the time to go within and see on what levels you are ready to be clear of the past - for cleanliness is next to godliness!

Australia's Unknown History

- Rex Gilroy -

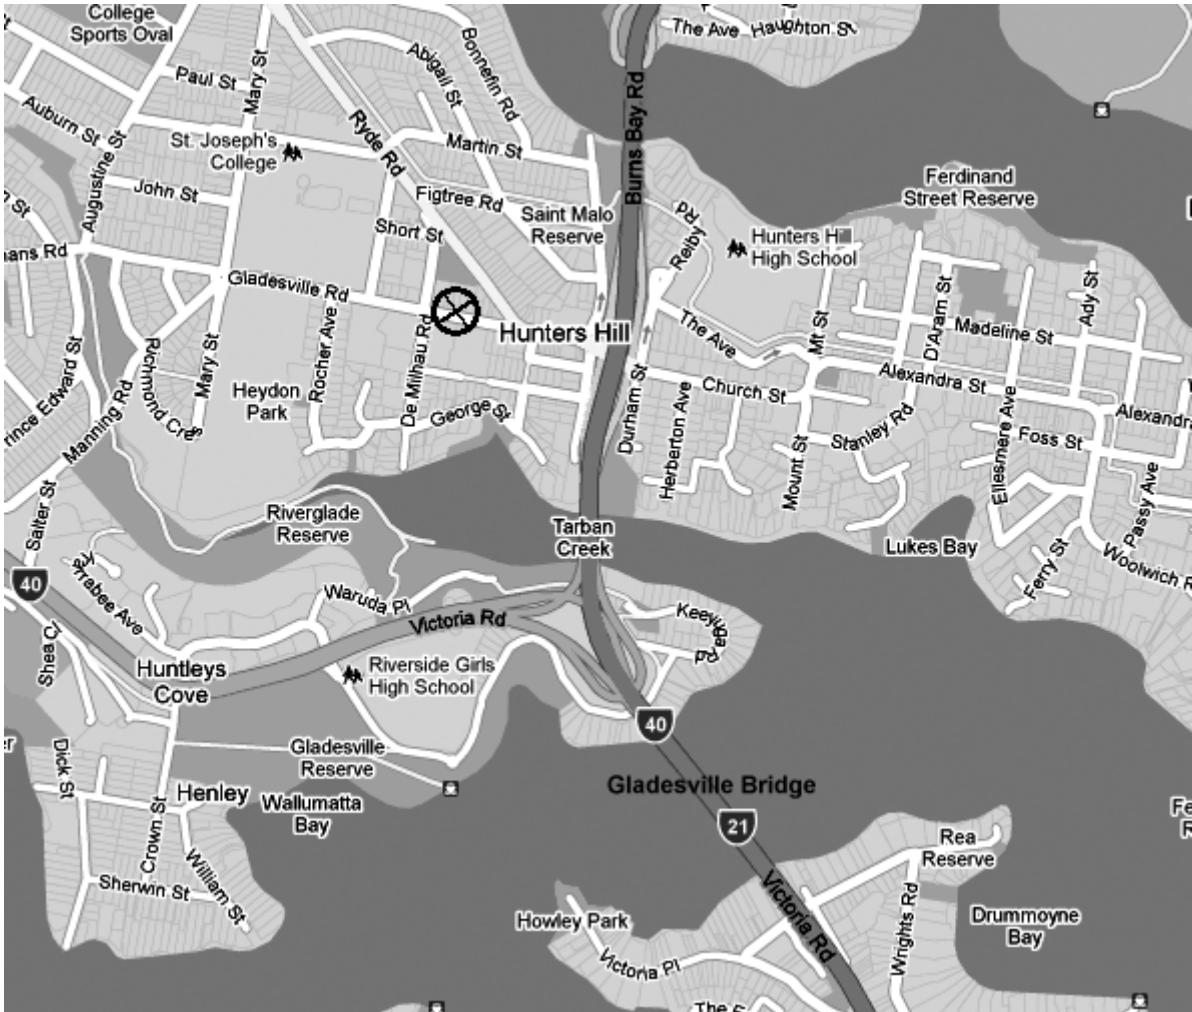

Rex Gilroy, known Australia-wide as the “Yowie Man” for his 55 years research into these primitive relict hominins is the ‘father’ of both Yowie and mystery animal [ie Cyp-tozoology] research in Australia.

Rex will introduce us to his work with a Powerpoint presentation. It will begin with evidence for a pre-Aboriginal ‘Old Stone-Age’ past. Fossil skull evidence for Australopithecines and Homo erectus in Australia, and fossil footprints, including those of giants, together with their stone ‘megatools’ will be presented.

Also evidence of the Australian ‘lost’ megalithic civilisation of Uru with its temples, stone circles, stone alignments and deity heads. Plus evidence of ancient Old and New World civilisation Australian contacts which will feature pyramids and relics, including recent evidence of 3,000 years old Celto-Phoenician and Swedish Viking contacts with this land.

The Gilroys are certain that this ‘not politically correct’ talk will fascinate all open-minded people who come to see what they have to reveal about our ‘hidden’ past.
